Between 1965 and 1977 Iran enjoyed political stability and considerable economic growth, based on oil wealth. In March 1975 the Shah introduced a single party system (based on the Iran National Resurgence Party—Rastakhiz). Opposition became increasingly evident, however, and during 1977 and 1978 demonstrations and strikes against the Shah and, in particular, against his secret police (SAVAK) rose to crisis level. The most effective opposition came from the exiled religious leader, Ayatollah Khomeini, who conducted his campaign from Paris, where he had arrived in October 1978 after 14 years of exile in Iraq. Khomeini demanded a return to the principles of Islam, and the response to this call in Iran was so great that the Shah felt compelled to leave Iran in January 1979. Khomeini arrived in Teheran on February 1st, quickly overcame opposition from Dr. Shapour Bakhtiar (the Prime Minister appointed by the Shah) and took power on February 11th. He appointed a provisional government, with Dr. Mehdi Bazargan as Prime Minister, but power rested with the 15-member Islamic Revolutionary Council.

Iran quickly cut its ties with CENTO and aligned itself with the Arab world against Israel. Khomeini declared Iran an Islamic Republic on April 1st, and a new Constitution (see Constitution, below) was approved by referendum in December. Presidential elections followed in January 1980 and resulted in a convincing win for Abolhasan Bani-Sadr. Elections to the 270-seat Majlis were held in March and May 1980, and resulted in a clear win for the Islamic Republican Party, the party identified with Khomeini.

After the Majlis began its first session in May 1980 the Islamic Revolutionary Council was dissolved. It was clear that a rift was developing between President Bani-Sadr and the more extreme element in the Islamic Republican Party. Bani-Sadr distrusted the Prime Minister, Muhammad Ali Rajai, whom he had reluctantly nominated on August 10th. In March 1981 Ayatollah Khomeini appointed a 3-man commission to resolve these differences, but on June 10th, 1981, Khomeini dismissed Bani-Sadr as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, and a few days later he was deprived of the Presidency and subsequently fled to France, where he formed a "National Council of Resistance" in alliance with Massoud Rajavi, the former leader of the Mujaheddin Khalq, who had also fled to France.

Meanwhile, in Iran, political chaos developed. A 3-man Presidential Council replaced Bani-Sadr after his dismissal, until new Presidential elections could be held on July 24th. On June 28th, however, a bomb exploded at the headquarters of the Islamic Republican Party, killing Ayatollah Beheshti (the Chief Justice and Head of the Islamic Republican Party), four Cabinet ministers, six deputy ministers and 20 Parliamentary deputies.

On July 24th the Presidential elections took place as arranged and resulted in a win for the Prime Minister, Muhammad Ali Rajai. Muhammad Javad Bahonar then became Prime Minister of a government introduced to the Majlis on August 13th. A further bomb outrage occurred on August 29th, this time killing both the President (Rajai) and the Prime Minister (Bahonar). Ayatollah Muhammad Reza Mahdavi Kani became Prime Minister in September, and another round of Presidential elections took place on October 2nd. Hojatoleslam Ali Khamenei, a leading figure of the Islamic Republican Party, was elected President, winning more than 16 million of the 16.8 million votes cast. At the end of October, after the resignation of Ayatollah Muhammad Reza Mahdavi Kani, Mir Hussein Moussavi was appointed Prime Minister. The political situation remained uncertain. Amnesty International estimated that 1,800 executions took place in Iran between June and mid-October 1981, with the Islamic guerrillas, the Mujaheddin Khalq, bearing the brunt of the persecution.

Internal political strife has not been the only problem of post-Revolutionary Iran. War broke out with Iraq in September 1980, when Iraq invaded Iran over a 300-mile front after a border dispute. A position of stalemate was soon reached, with Iraq occupying narrow strips of Iranian territory north of the Shatt el Arab, and the war still lingered on in February 1982.

Iran's relations with the U.S.A. received a severe setback in November 1979, when Iranian students seized 53 American hostages in the American Embassy in Teheran. The original purpose of the seizure of the hostages was to demand the return of the Shah (then in the U.S.A.) to Iran to face trial. The problem was not resolved by the death of the Shah in Egypt in July 1980, as other demands were made by the Iranians, the most important of which politically was for a U.S. undertaking not to interfere in the affairs of Iran. Intense diplomatic activity finally resulted in the release of the hostages on January 20th, 1981.

Tension over Iran's ethnic minorities, either not in evidence or stifled under the Shah, has been a recurring problem since the revolution. Most serious has been the demand for autonomy from the Kurds in the west, which has often led to open warfare in that area. The Democratic Party of Iranian Kurdistan was also reported to be offering its support to the National Council of Resistance which Bani-Sadr and Rajavi were forming in Paris in the latter half of 1981. Other minorities have also demanded autonomy. These include the Baluchis in the south-east, the Turkomans in the north-east and the Azerbaizhanis in the north-west. Conflict with the Arab minority in the south-west has also intensified hostile relations with Iraq and contributed to the outbreak of the Gulf War.

Government

Iran is governed by a popularly-elected President for a term of 4 years, and a popularly-elected Majlis (National Assembly) of 270 members for a term of 4 years. A 12-man Council for the Protection of the Constitution ensures that legislation is in accordance with the Constitution and Islam. The executive, legislative and judicial wings of state power are subject to the authority of the velayat faghhih (religious leader).

Defence

In July 1981 Iran's armed forces totalled 195,000 (army 150,000, navy 10,000, air force 35,000). There were 400,000 reserves and 75,000 in para-military forces. There is a 2-year period of military service. Defence expenditure in 1980 was 300,000 million rials.

Economic Affairs

Under normal conditions Iran is one of the world's leading petroleum producers, and the massive oil revenues have stimulated the rest of the economy. Although industry now predominates over agriculture in the formation of the gross national product, agriculture still occupies a larger proportion than industry of the total labour force. Most types of grain, sugar beet, fruit, nuts and vegetables are grown. Dairy produce, wool, hair and hides are also produced. There is a small fishing industry, both in the Caspian Sea, where caviar is obtained, and in the Persian Gulf. Forests cover over 20 million hectares. There are considerable iron ore and copper deposits, although the copper at Sar Cheshmeh, due to come on stream in 1980, has been delayed by the disruption caused by the revolution, but test operations began in December 1981.

The Islamic revolution of 1978/79, the Gulf War of 1980/81, and the political troubles of 1981 have hampered the economy considerably. Oil remains predominant but production, which was running at about 6 million b/d in 1976, fell to 5.2 million b/d in 1978 and 3.1 million b/d in 1979. It was generally accepted that production was picking up in 1980, but the onset of the Gulf War in September 1980 seriously affected output, and 1980 production was only 1.5 million b/d. Government oil revenues fell from U.S. $23,000 million in 1977 to U.S. $11,600 million in 1980.

In September 1979 the National Iranian Oil Company (NIOC) was placed under the control of the Ministry of Petroleum, and in August 1980 foreign oil companies operating offshore in the Gulf were grouped under a new government company, Continental Shelf Oil Company of the Islamic Republic.

In late 1981 there was little doubt that the Iranian economy was in a poor state. Optimistic government statements claimed that oil exports were running at an average of 1 million b/d, but international oil commentators felt that this figure was much too high. With imports rising, and with little sign of an end to the Gulf War, future prospects seemed bleak.

Transport and Communications

Communications are made difficult in Iran by the extensive mountain ranges, but there are over 4,500 km. of railways, and extensions are under construction and electrification is planned. There are over 43,000 km. of paved and gravel roads. The principal ports on the Persian Gulf are Bushire, Lingah, Bandar Abbas, Khorramshahr and Bandar Khomeini. Ports on the Caspian Sea are Bandar Turkman and Bandar Anzali. Iran National Airlines provides internal and international air services.

Social Welfare

Under Article 29 of the 1979 Constitution, the Government has a duty to provide every citizen with health, unemployment and old-age insurance.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory for both sexes, but this has not been fully implemented in rural areas. In 1978/79 over 7 million children were attending many thousands of primary and secondary schools. There are 16 universities, which are gradually reopening after the Revolution. Post-revolutionary policy has been to eliminate mixed-sex schools and cut down on art and music.

Tourism

Under normal conditions Iran's chief attraction for the tourist is its wealth of historical sites—notably Isfahan, Rasht, Tabriz, Susa, Persepolis.

Public Holidays

The Iranian year 1361 corresponds with the Gregorian calendar March 21st, 1982, to March 20th, 1983, and the year 1362 with March 21st, 1983, to March 20th, 1984.

1982: June 5th (Revolution Day), June 9th (Birthday of Twelfth Imam), July 14th (Martyrdom of Imam Ali), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr), September 29th (Id ul Adha), October 28th (Ashoura), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of Muhammad).

1983: February 11th (National Day—Fall of the Shah), March 20th (Oil Nationalization Day), March 21st—24th

(Now Ruz, the Iranian New Year), April 1st (Islamic Republic Day), April 2nd (Revolution Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, but some traditional units are still in general use.

FINANCE

100 dinars = 1 Iranian rial.

Coins: 50 dinars; 1, 2, 5, 10 and 20 rials.

Notes: 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 200, 500, 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 rials.

1,000 Iranian rials = £6.58 = $12.65.

Note: From December 1946 to May 1957 the official exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 32.25 rials (1 rial = 3.1008 U.S. cents) but other rates were in operation for certain commercial transactions. From 1956 the trade rate was $1 = 75.75 rials (1 rial = 1.3201 U.S. cents) and this was the official parity from May 1957 to February 1973, despite the devaluation of the U.S. dollar in December 1971. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 181.80 rials from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 197.38 rials from December 1971 to June 1972. In February 1973 a new par value of $1 = 68.175 rials was established but the Iranian authorities introduced market rates of $1 = 67.50 rials (buying) or 67.75 rials (selling), with a mid-point of $1 = 67.625 rials. In February 1975 the direct link with the dollar was broken and until 1977 the rial was tied to the IMF Special Drawing Right (at a mid-point of 82.24 rials per SDR), whose value is determined by changes in a weighted "basket" of currencies. The market rate against the U.S. dollar was frequently adjusted. It was $1 = 66.641 rials from February to July 1975, $1 = 69.275 rials from October 1975 to March 1976, $1 = 70.625 rials from June 1976 to December 1977 and $1 = 70.475 rials from December 1977 to May 1980. The rial was again linked to the SDR in May 1980, with the exchange rate set at 1 SDR = 92.30 rials. The average exchange rate (rials per U.S. dollar) was: 67.639 in 1975; 70.222 in 1976; 70.617 in 1977; 70.615 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

A draft Constitution was published in mid-June 1979 and a 75-member "Council of Experts" was elected to debate the various clauses and propose amendments. The amended Constitution was put to a referendum in early December 1979 and gained the approval of the electorate.

The Constitution states that the form of government of Iran is that of an Islamic Republic, and that the spirituality and ethics of Islam are to be the basis for political, social and economic relations. Persians, Turks, Kurds, Arabs, Baluchis, Turkomans and others will enjoy completely equal rights.

The Constitution provides for a popularly-elected President for a term of four years and a popularly-elected Majlis (Islamic Consultative Assembly) of 270 members for a term of four years. Provision is made for the representation of Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians.

All legislation passed by the Islamic Consultative Assembly must be sent to the Council for the Protection of the Constitution (Article 94), which will ensure that it is in accordance with the Constitution and Islamic legislation. The Council for the Protection of the Constitution consists of six religious lawyers appointed by the faghih (see below) and six lawyers appointed by the High Council of the Judiciary and approved by the Islamic Consultative Assembly. Articles 19-42 deal with the basic rights of individuals, and provide for equality of men and women before the law and for equal human, political, economic, social and cultural rights for both sexes.

The press is free, except in matters that are contrary to public morality or insult religious belief. The formation of religious, political and professional parties, associations and societies is free, provided they do not negate the principles of independence, freedom, sovereignty and national unity, or the basis of Islam.

The amended Constitution contains a significant change from the earlier draft. It provides for a velayat faghih (religious leader) who, in the absence of the Imam Mehdi (the hidden Twelfth Imam), carries the burden of leadership. Article 107 gives Ayatollah Khomeini these powers for the rest of his natural life. Thereafter, an elected council of experts will choose an individual or three or five people to form a council of leadership, and the choice must be "approved by the nation". According to Article 57 the executive, legislative and judicial branches of state power are under the authority of the faghih. Among the extensive powers reserved to the faghih is the right to appoint half the members of the Council for the Protection of the Constitution (see above). He is also Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and can appoint the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Head of the Revolutionary Guard. He appoints four of the seven members of the National Defence Council and, on their recommendation, appoints the senior commanders of the armed forces. He also has power to declare war and make peace on the recommendation of the National Defence Council. The first faghih has the right to vet all candidates for the Presidency (a right which was exercised by Ayatollah Khomeini). The faghih can also dismiss the President on the basis of a Supreme Court decision or a vote of no confidence by the Islamic Consultative Assembly.

According to the latest state division (May 1977), Iran is divided into 23 provinces (Ostans), 472 counties (shah-restan) and 499 municipalities (bakhsh).

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

SUPREME COURT

- President: Ayatollah ABDOLKARIM MUSAVI ARDEBILI.
- Prosecutor-General: RABBANI AMLASHI.

ISLAMIC REVOLUTIONARY COURTS

- Head of Military Revolutionary Courts and Head of Drug Offences Court: Hojatoleslam MOKHDAI.

These were introduced after the revolution and have tried and executed numerous people. Section 11 of the new Constitution outlines the new Judicial System. The faghih (religious leader) appoints the Head of the Supreme Court, the President of the Supreme Judicial Council and the Prosecutor-General. According to Article 167, judges must reach verdicts based on precedent or Islamic sources. In August 1980 talks were held on merging the Revolutionary Courts with the civil courts left from the Shah's regime. In September 1981 Ayatollah KHOMEINI delegated his power of appointment to the Supreme Judicial Council to Ayatollah MONTAZARI.

RELIGION

According to the new 1979 Constitution, the official religion is Islam and the Ja'fari Sect (Shi'ite), but other Islamic sects, including Zeydi, Hanafi, Maleki, Shafe'i and Hanbali, will be valid and respected. Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians will be recognized as official religious minorities. According to the 1976 census there were then 310,000 Christians (mainly Armenian), 80,000 Jews and 30,000 Zoroastrians.

MUSLIMS

The great majority of the Iranian people are Shi'i Muslims, but there is a minority of Sunni Muslims. Persians and Azerbaizhanis are mainly Shi'i, while the other national groups are mainly Sunni.

During 1978 there was a revival of the influence of the Ayatollahs (or senior Shi'ite divines). The Iranian people felt that a return to a closer observance of the tenets of Islam was necessary. Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Qom, who had been exiled to Iraq in 1964 and moved to near Paris in October 1978, conducted a campaign of opposition to the Shah, returning to Iran in February 1979 and bringing about the downfall of the Shah's regime. Other important Ayatollahs include Ayatollah ABDOLKARIM MUSAVI ARDEBILI, Ayatollah HOSSEIN ALI MONTAZARI of Teheran and the Ayatollahs SHARIATMADARI, MARASHI-NAJANI and GOLPAYEGANI of Qom.

ZOROASTRIANS

There are about 30,000 Zoroastrians, a remnant of a once widespread sect. Their religious leader is MOUBAD.

OTHER COMMUNITIES

Communities of Armenians, and somewhat smaller numbers of Jews, Assyrians, Greek Orthodox, Uniates and Latin Christians are also found as officially recognized faiths. The Baha'i faith, which originated in Iran, has about 450,000 adherents.

Roman Catholic (Chaldean) Archbishop of Teheran: Ave. Forsat 91, Teheran; Most Rev. YOHANNAN SEMAAN ISSAYI; 28,395 Catholics (1976).

H. B. DEHQANI-TAFTI, Bishop's House, P.O.B. 12, Isfahan; Diocese founded 1912.

Synod of the Evangelical (Presbyterian) Church in Iran: Assyrian Evangelical Church, Khiaban-i Hanifnejad, Khiaban-i Aramanch, Teheran; Moderator Rev. ADLE NAKHOSTEEN.

THE PRESS

Teheran dominates the press scene as many of the daily papers are published there and the bi-weekly, weekly and less frequent publications in the provinces generally depend on the major metropolitan dailies as a source of news. A press law which was announced in August 1979 required all newspapers and magazines to be licensed and imposed penalties of imprisonment for insulting senior religious figures. Offences against the Act will be tried in the criminal courts. In the new Constitution, approved in December 1979, the press will be free, except in matters that are contrary to public morality, insult religious belief or slander the honour and reputation of individuals. Many of the papers which were published under the Shah's regime ceased publication after the revolution. In August 1980 Ayatollah Khomeini issued directives which indicated that censorship would be tightened up, and several papers were closed down in 1981.

Iranian State Railway: Teheran; f. 1938; Pres. S. M. ALIZADEH; Technical and Planning Vice-Pres. M. BAIATI; Admin. and Financial Vice-Pres. H. ASGARI.

The Iranian railway system includes the following main routes.

Trans-Iranian Railway runs 1,392 km. from Bandar Turkman on the Caspian Sea in the north, through Teheran, and south to Bandar Imam Khomeini on the Persian Gulf.

Southern Line links Teheran to Khuninshahr (Khorramshahr) via Qom, Arak, Dorood, Andimeshk and Ahwaz; 937 km.

Northern Line links Teheran to Gorgan via Garmsar, Firooz Kooh and Sari; 499 km.

Teheran-Tabriz Line linking with the Azerbaizhan Railway; 736 km.

Garmsar-Meshed Line connects Teheran with Meshed via Semnan, Damghan, Shahrud and Nishabur; 812 km.

Qom-Zahedan Line when completed will be an inter-continental line linking Europe and Turkey, through Iran, with India. Zahedan is situated 91.7 km. west of the Baluchistan frontier, and is the end of the Pakistani broad gauge railway. The section at present links Qom to Kerman via Kashan, Sistan, Yazd, Baigh and Zarand; 1,005 km. A branch line from Sistan was opened in 1971 via Isfahan to the steel mill at Zarrin Shahr; 112 km.

Ahwaz-Bandar Khomeini Line connects Bandar Khomeini with the Trans-Iranian railway at Ahwaz; 112 km.

Azerbaijan Railway extends from Tabriz to Julfa (146.5 km.), meeting the Caucasian railways at the Soviet frontier. Electrification works for this section are now complete. A standard gauge railway line (139 km.) extends from Tabriz (via Sharaf-Khaneh) to the Turkish frontier at Razi.

The total length of main lines is 4,567 km.

Underground Railway. An agreement was signed in March 1976 between the Municipality of Teheran and French contractors for the construction of a subway. Four lines are to be built with a total length of 143 km. Construction began during 1978, but it was announced in May 1979, that the whole project was under revision.

ROADS

Ministry of Roads: Ministry of Roads and Transport, Teheran.

In early 1980 there were 24,806 km. of paved roads, 26,484 km. of gravel roads and 11,825 km. of earth roads. There is a paved highway (A.1) from Bazargan on the Turkish border to the Afghanistan border. The A 2 highway runs from the Iraqi border to Mir Javeh on the Pakistan border. 2,190 km. of the A.2 has been completed, and the remaining 110 km. are under construction.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Principal waterways:

Lake Rezaiyeh (Lake Urmia) 50 miles west of Tabriz in North-West Iran; and River Kharun flowing south through the oilfields into the River Shatt el Arab, thence to the head of the Persian Gulf near Abadan.

Lake Rezaiyeh: From Sharafkhaneh to Golmankhaneh there is a twice-weekly service of tugs and barges for transport of passengers and goods.

River Karun: Regular cargo service is operated by the Mesopotamia-Iran Corpn. Ltd. Iranian firms also operate daily motor-boat services for passengers and goods.

SHIPPING

Ports and Shipping Organization: Dir. Eng. ALI MAHMUDI.

Persian Gulf: Principal ports are Khuninshahr (Khorramshahr), Bushire, Bandar Abbas, Bandar Khomeini. Bushire is being developed to supplement the facilities at Khuninshahr (Khorramshahr), while the capacity of Bandar Abbas has recently been increased.

Caspian Sea: Principal port Bandar Turkman.

Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines: P.O.B. 353, Arya Building, 127 Ghaem Magham Farahani Ave., Teheran; placed under management of Ministry of Commerce Jan. 1980; 40 vessels; liner services between the Persian Gulf and Europe; Chair. and Man. Dir. AHMAD ALI ERFANI.

CIVIL AVIATION

The two main international airports are Mehrabad (Teheran) and Abadan.

Iran National Airlines Corporation (Iran Air): Iran Air Building Mehrabad Airport, Teheran; f. 1962; Man. Dir. Dr. TAQI FARAH; serves Persian Gulf area, Baghdad, Istanbul, Athens, Jeddah, Frankfurt, Geneva, London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Tokyo, Beijing, Karachi and Bombay; fleet of five Boeing 707, five Boeing 727-200, three Boeing 727-100, four Boeing 737, five F-27, three Boeing 747-200, four Boeing 747-SF.

Iran is also normally served by the following foreign lines: Aeroflot (U.S.S.R.), Air France, Air India, Alia (Jordan), Alitalia (Italy), Ariana Afghan Airlines, British Airways, CSA (Czechoslovakia), Iraqi Airways, JAL (Japan), KLM (Netherlands), Kuwait Airways, Lufthansa (Federal Republic of Germany), PIA (Pakistan), Sabena (Belgium), SAS (Sweden), Swissair, Syrian Arab Airlines, SV (Saudi Airlines). By mid-October 1981 only Swissair was flying to Teheran.

TOURISM

Tourism has suffered considerably from the disturbances caused by the revolution and the war with Iraq. The Islamic element in Iranian cultural life is now encouraged, and Western influences are discouraged.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Atomic Energy Organization of Iran: P.O.B. 12-1198, Teheran; f. 1973; originally set up to produce nuclear power to provide for the base load electricity needs of the country; main aim now is the exploration and exploitation of uranium; to secure fuel needs of Iran's nuclear energy programme; to utilize nuclear energy in industry and medicine; to provide research and development work and training for greater national self-sufficiency in nuclear technology; Pres. Dr. FEREDOUN SAHABI.

Teheran University Nuclear Centre: Institute of Nuclear Science and Technology, P.O.B. 2989, Teheran; f. 1958; research in nuclear physics, electronics, nuclear chemistry, radiobiology and nuclear engineering; training and advice on nuclear science and the peaceful applications of atomic energy; a 5-MW pool-type research reactor on the new campus of Teheran University went critical in November 1967; a 3-MeV Van de Graaff-type accelerator became operational in 1972; Dir. Dr. J. MOGHIMI.

IRAQ

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Iraq is an almost landlocked state with a narrow outlet on to the Persian Gulf. Its neighbours are Iran to the east, Turkey to the north, Syria and Jordan to the west, and Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to the south. The climate is extreme, with hot, dry summers, when temperatures rise to over 43°C (110°F), and cold winters. Summers are humid near the Persian Gulf. The official language is Arabic, spoken by about 80 per cent of the population. About 15 per cent speak Kurdish and there is a small Turkoman-speaking minority. About 95 per cent of the population is Muslim and more than 50 per cent are Shi'ite, although the ruling group are Sunnis. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is a horizontal tricolour, red, white and black, the white band charged with three five-pointed green stars. The capital is Baghdad.

Recent History

Iraq was formerly part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. During the 1914-18 war it was captured by British forces and after the war became a kingdom under a League of Nations mandate, administered by Britain. The mandate ended in October 1932, when Iraq became independent.

An army coup in July 1958 resulted in the assassination of King Faisal and the establishment of a republic under Brig. (later Gen.) Abdul Karim Kassem. For more than four years Kassem maintained a precarious and increasingly isolated position opposed by Pan-Arabs, Kurds and other groups. In February 1963 the Pan-Arab element in the armed forces staged a coup in which Kassem was assassinated and a new government set up under Col. (later Field Marshal) Abdul Salem Muhammad Aref, who initiated a policy of closer relations with Egypt. Martial law, in force since 1958, was brought to an end in January 1965, and a purely civilian government was inaugurated in September 1965. In March 1966 President Aref was killed in an air accident, and was succeeded by his brother, Major-Gen. Abdul Rahman Muhammad Aref. The second President Aref was ousted by members of the Baath Party in July 1968. Major-Gen. (later Field Marshal) Ahmed Hassan al-Bakr, a former Prime Minister, became President and Prime Minister, and supreme authority was vested in the Revolutionary Command Council (RCC), of which President al-Bakr was also President.

Relations with Syria deteriorated after a younger generation of Baathists seized power in Syria in 1970, and, except for a period in 1978/79, bitter rivalry has existed between Syrian and Iraqi Baathists. Relations with Syria dramatically improved in October 1978 when President Assad of Syria visited Baghdad. Plans were announced for eventual complete political and economic union of the two countries. Economic difficulties, such as the dispute over water from the Euphrates, were soon settled but progress on political union was slow. On July 16th, 1979, the Vice-Chairman of the Revolutionary Command Council, Saddam Hussein, who had long been the real power in Iraq, replaced Bakr as Chairman, and also as President of Iraq. A few days later an attempted coup was reported and several members of the RCC were executed for their alleged part in the plot. The suspicion of Syrian implication put an end to all further talk of political union between Iraq and Syria but economic co-operation has continued.

During 1979 the National Progressive Front, an alliance of Baathists and Communists, broke up amidst accusations from communist sources that the Baathists were conducting a "reign of terror". In February 1980 Hussein announced his "National Charter", reaffirming the principles of non-alignment. In June 1980 elections took place for a 250-member National Assembly, and in September 1980 for a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council.

Relations with Iran, precarious for many years, developed into full-scale war in September 1980. Prior to 1975 Iran had been supporting a rebellion by Kurds in Northern Iraq. An agreement between Iran and Iraq signed in 1975 defined the border between the two countries as running down the middle of the Shatt el Arab waterway, and also virtually ended the Kurdish rebellion by depriving it of Iranian support. In the years after 1975, however, Iraq grew increasingly dissatisfied with the 1975 Shatt el Arab agreement. Iraq also wanted the withdrawal of Iranian forces from Abu Musa and Tumb islands which Iran occupied in 1971.

The Iranian revolution exacerbated these grievances. Conflict soon developed over Arab demands for autonomy in Iran's Khuzestan (named "Arabistan" by Arabs), which Iran accused Iraq of encouraging. Iraq's Sunni leadership was suspicious of Shi'ite Iran, and feared that trouble might arise from its own Shi'ites, who form over 50 per cent of the population. Border squabbling took place between Iraq and Iran in the summer of 1980, and more extensive fighting began after Iran ignored Iraqi diplomatic efforts demanding the withdrawal of Iranian forces from the border area of Zain ul Qos in Diali province. Iraq maintained that this area should have been returned under the 1975 agreement, which Iraq then abrogated on September 16th, 1980. Iraqi advances into Iran began on September 22nd, and a position of stalemate was soon reached along a 300-mile front which had not been resolved by February 1982.

Iraq has always supported the Arab cause in the struggle against Israel, but it was not until late 1978, and in particular in March 1979, when Baghdad was the venue for the Arab summit which agreed on sanctions against Egypt for signing the peace treaty with Israel, that Iraq moved to the forefront of countries opposing Israel. Iraq has to some extent been distracted from this position by involvement in the Gulf war.

Government

Power rests with the President and a Revolutionary Command Council, which in December 1981 comprised 17 members, and is identical with the Iraq Regional Command of the Baath Party, while the day-to-day running of the country is carried out by a Council of Ministers. There is a 250-member National Assembly. The country is divided into 15 Provinces and 3 Autonomous Regions. A Kurdish autonomous area has been set up and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council was elected in September 1980.

Defence

Military service is compulsory for all men at the age of eighteen years and lasts between 21 months and two years, extendable in wartime. In July 1981 the army had a total strength of 210,000; the air force had a strength of 38,000, and the navy 4,250. The navy is to be expanded. There were 250,000 reserves. In order to wage the Gulf War, these forces are supplemented by a 250,000-strong popular army—a uniformed citizens' volunteer force.

Economic Affairs

Petroleum is the most important sector of the economy, and by 1979 Iraq had outstripped Iran as the largest oil producer in the Middle East after Saudi Arabia. Production rose from 2.21 million b/d in 1977 to 2.6 million b/d in 1978 and 3.45 million b/d in 1979, while revenues rose from U.S. $9,500 million to $21,200 million over the same period. Because of the outbreak of the Gulf War and a lower world demand for oil, production in 1980 fell by 23.7 per cent to 2.64 million b/d, but higher prices meant that oil revenues rose to U.S. $26,500 million. By August 1981 it was estimated that oil production had fallen to about 900,000 b/d, but there was little sign of any economic crisis, although foreign exchange reserves have been considerably drawn upon. Although the port of Basra was closed, oil was being piped to the Mediterranean, and ambitious plans were still going forward for schemes of railway improvement, and for the construction of a motorway from the Jordanian border to Kuwait via Baghdad.

Over 50 per cent of the labour force is engaged in agriculture and several irrigation schemes are expected to make a long-term improvement in agricultural production. Iraq is the world's largest exporter of dates.

Transport and Communications

Iraq has about 2,000 km. of railway track. The main means of travel is road. New trunk roads have been built and the 1976-80 development plan has extended the road system. In many desert areas the natural surfaces are passable for vehicles. The lower reaches of the Euphrates and the combined mouth of the Tigris and Euphrates, the Shatt el Arab, are navigable (although affected by war since late 1980) and deep-water oil berths serve the oil-fields.

Social Welfare

A limited Social Security Scheme was introduced in 1957 and extended in 1976. Benefits are given for old age, sickness, unemployment, maternity, marriage and death. Health services are free.

Education

Education is free and primary education lasting six years is compulsory in an effort to reduce illiteracy. In 1977/78 more than 2 million children were attending 8,387 primary schools. A U.S. $22 million anti-illiteracy drive began in December 1978, and has been encouraged by President Hussein. There are six universities, and about U.S. $900 million was to be spent on university building projects in 1979/80.

Tourism

Iraq is the ancient Mesopotamia of early history, and one of the oldest centres of civilization. The ruins of Ur of the Chaldees, Babylon, Nineveh and other relics of the Sumerian, Babylonian, Assyrian and Persian Empires are of interest to the tourist. Hatra and Ctesiphon represent the early medieval period.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), July 14th (Republic Day, anniversary of the 1958 coup), July 17th (National Day, anniversary of the 1968 coup), July 23rd-25th* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th-October 1st* (Id ul Adha), October 19th* (Muslim New Year), October 28th* (Ashoura), December 28th* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 6th (Army Day), February 8th (14 Ramadan Revolution).

*Approximate only; these are Muslim holidays determined by sightings of the moon, which vary each year.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force. Some local measurements are also used, e.g. 1 meshara or dunum = 0.62 acre (2,500 sq. metres).

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 fils = 20 dirhams = 1 Iraqi dinar (I.D.).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 568.0 fils;
U.S. $1 = 295.3 fils.

Note: From September 1949 to August 1971 the par value of the Iraqi dinar was U.S. $2.80 ($1 = 357.14 fils). Between December 1971 and February 1973 the dinar's value was $3.04 ($1 = 328.95 fils). In February 1973 the par value of the dinar was fixed at $3.3778 ($1 = 296.05 fils), with a market rate of 1 dinar = $3.3862 ($1 = 295.31 fils). From 1976 the latter also became the rate for calculating the value of foreign trade transactions. The Iraqi dinar was at par with the pound sterling until November 1967, after which the exchange rate was £1 = 857.14 fils (1 dinar = £1.167) until June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

The following are the principal features of the Provisional Constitution issued on September 22nd, 1968:

The Iraqi Republic is a popular democratic and sovereign state. Islam is the state religion.

The political economy of the state is founded on socialism.

The state will protect liberty of religion, freedom of speech and opinion. Public meetings are permitted under the law. All discrimination based on race, religion or language is forbidden. There shall be freedom of the Press, and the right to form societies and trade unions in conformity with the law is guaranteed.

The Iraqi people is composed of two main nationalities: Arab and Kurds. The Constitution confirms the nationalistic rights of the Kurdish people and the legitimate rights of all other minorities within the framework of Iraqi unity.

The highest authority in the country is the Council of Command of the Revolution (or Revolutionary Command Council—RCC), which will promulgate laws until the election of a National Assembly. Since September 1977 the membership of the RCC (17 in December 1980) and the Iraqi Command of the Arab Baath Socialist Party have been identical. The Council exercises its prerogatives and powers by a two-thirds majority.

Two amendments to the constitution were announced in November 1969. The President, already Chief of State and head of the government, also became the official Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and President of the Command Council of the Revolution. Membership of the latter body was to increase from five to a larger number at the President's discretion.

Earlier, a Presidential decree replaced the 14 local government districts by 16 governorates, each headed by a governor with wide powers. In April 1976 Tekrit (Saladin) and Kerbala became separate governorates, bringing the number of governorates to 18, although three of these are designated Autonomous Regions.

The fifteen-article statement which aimed to end the Kurdish war was issued on March 11th, 1970. In accordance with this statement a form of autonomy was offered to the Kurds in March 1974, but some of the Kurds rejected the offer and fresh fighting broke out. The new Provisional Constitution was announced in July 1970. Two amendments were introduced in 1973 and 1974, the 1974 amendment stating that "the area whose majority of population is Kurdish shall enjoy autonomy in accordance with what is defined by the Law".

The President and Vice-President are elected by a two-thirds majority of the Council. The President, Vice-President and members of the Council will be responsible to the Council. Vice-Presidents and Ministers will be responsible to the President.

In July 1973, President Bakr announced a National Charter as a first step towards establishing the Progressive National Front. A National Assembly and People's Councils are features of the Charter. A law to set up a 250-member National Assembly and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council was adopted on March 16th, 1980, and the two Assemblies were elected in June and September 1980 respectively.

LEGISLATURE

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

No form of National Assembly existed in Iraq between the 1958 revolution, which overthrew the monarchy, and June 1980. The existing provisional constitution contained provisions for the election of an assembly at a date to be determined by the Government. The members of the Assembly are to be elected from all political, social and economic sectors of the Iraqi people. In December 1979 the RCC invited political, trade union and popular organizations to debate a draft law for setting up a 250-member National Assembly and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council, both to be elected by direct, free and secret ballot. Elections for the National Assembly took place on June 20th, 1980, and for the Kurdish Legislative Council on September 11th, 1980. More than 75 per cent of those elected to the National Assembly are members of the ruling Baath Party.

Chairman and Speaker: NAIM HADDAD.

IRAQ

Revolutionary Courts: These deal with major cases that would affect the security of the state in any sphere: political, financial or economic.

Courts of Sessions: There is in every District of Appeal a Court of Sessions which consists of three judges under the presidency of the President of the Court of Appeal or one of his Vice-Presidents. It considers the penal suits prescribed by Penal Proceedings Law and other laws. More than one Court of Sessions may be established in one District of Appeal by notification issued by the Minister of Justice mentioning therein its headquarters, jurisdiction and the manner of its establishment.

Shara' Courts: A Shara' Court is established wherever there is a First Instance Court; the Muslim judge of the First Instance Court may be a Qadhi to the Shara' Court if a special Qadhi has not been appointed thereto. The Shara' Court considers matters of personal status and religious matters in accordance with the provisions of the law supplement to the Civil and Commercial Proceedings Law.

Penal Courts: A Penal Court of first grade is established in every First Instance Court. The judge of the First Instance Court is considered as penal judge unless a special judge is appointed thereto. More than one Penal Court may be established to consider the suits prescribed by the Penal Proceedings Law and other laws.

One or more Investigation Court may be established in the centre of each Liwa and a judge is appointed thereto. They may be established in the centres of Qadhas and Nahiyas by order of the Minister of Justice. The judge carries out the investigation in accordance with the provisions of Penal Proceedings Law and the other laws.

There is in every First Instance Court a department for the execution of judgments presided over by the Judge of First Instance if a special President is not appointed thereto. It carries out its duties in accordance with the provisions of Execution Law.

RELIGION

ISLAM

About 95 per cent of the population are Muslims, more than 50 per cent of whom are Shi'ite. The Arabs of northern Iraq, the Bedouins, the Kurds, the Turkomans and some of the inhabitants of Baghdad and Basra are mainly of the Sunni sect, the remaining Arabs south of the Diyali belong to the Shi'i sect.

CHRISTIANITY

There are Christian communities in all the principal towns of Iraq, but their principal villages lie mostly in the Mosul district. The Christians of Iraq fall into three groups: (a) the free Churches, including the Nestorian, Gregorian, and Jacobite; (b) the churches known as Uniate, since they are in union with the Roman Catholic Church including the Armenian Uniates, Jacobite Uniates, and Chaldeans; (c) the bodies of Protestant converts, New Chaldeans, and Orthodox Armenians.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Courts in Iraq consist of the following: The Court of Cassation, Courts of Appeal, First Instance Courts, Peace Courts, Courts of Sessions, Shara' Courts and Penal Courts.

The Court of Cassation: This is the highest judicial bench of all the Civil Courts; it sits in Baghdad, and consists of the President and a number of Vice-Presidents and not fewer than fifteen permanent judges, delegated and not fewer than four as necessity requires. There are four judges and reporters as necessity requires. There are four bodies in the Court of Cassation, these are: (a) The General body, (b) Civil and Commercial body, (c) Personal Status body, (d) The Penal body.

Courts of Appeal: The country is divided into five Districts of Appeal: Baghdad, Mosul, Basra, Hilla, and Kirkuk, each with its Court of Appeal consisting of a President, Vice-Presidents and not fewer than three members, who consider the objections against the decisions issued by the First Instance Courts of first grade.

Courts of First Instance: These courts are of two kinds: Limited and Unlimited in jurisdiction.

Limited Courts deal with Civil and Commercial suits, the value of which is five hundred Dinars and less; and suits, the value of which cannot be defined, and which are subject to fixed fees. Limited Courts consider these suits in the final stage and they are subject to Cassation.

Unlimited Courts consider the Civil and Commercial suits irrespective of their value, and suits the value of which exceeds five hundred Dinars with first grade subject to appeal.

First Instance Courts consist of one judge in the centre of each Liwa, some Qadhas and Nahiyas, as the Minister of Justice judges necessary.

Revolutionary Courts: These deal with major cases that would affect the security of the state in any sphere: political, financial or economic.

Courts of Sessions: There is in every District of Appeal a Court of Sessions which consists of three judges under the presidency of the President of the Court of Appeal or one of his Vice-Presidents. It considers the penal suits prescribed by Penal Proceedings Law and other laws. More than one Court of Sessions may be established in one District of Appeal by notification issued by the Minister of Justice mentioning therein its headquarters, jurisdiction and the manner of its establishment.

Shara' Courts: A Shara' Court is established wherever there is a First Instance Court; the Muslim judge of the First Instance Court may be a Qadhi to the Shara' Court if a special Qadhi has not been appointed thereto. The Shara' Court considers matters of personal status and religious matters in accordance with the provisions of the law supplement to the Civil and Commercial Proceedings Law.

Penal Courts: A Penal Court of first grade is established in every First Instance Court. The judge of the First Instance Court is considered as penal judge unless a special judge is appointed thereto. More than one Penal Court may be established to consider the suits prescribed by the Penal Proceedings Law and other laws.

One or more Investigation Court may be established in the centre of each Liwa and a judge is appointed thereto. They may be established in the centres of Qadhas and Nahiyas by order of the Minister of Justice. The judge carries out the investigation in accordance with the provisions of Penal Proceedings Law and the other laws.

There is in every First Instance Court a department for the execution of judgments presided over by the Judge of First Instance if a special President is not appointed thereto. It carries out its duties in accordance with the provisions of Execution Law.

RELIGION

ISLAM

About 95 per cent of the population are Muslims, more than 50 per cent of whom are Shi'ite. The Arabs of northern Iraq, the Bedouins, the Kurds, the Turkomans and some of the inhabitants of Baghdad and Basra are mainly of the Sunni sect, the remaining Arabs south of the Diyali belong to the Shi'i sect.

CHRISTIANITY

There are Christian communities in all the principal towns of Iraq, but their principal villages lie mostly in the Mosul district. The Christians of Iraq fall into three groups. (a) the free Churches, including the Nestorian, Gregorian, and Jacobite; (b) the churches known as Uniate, since they are in union with the Roman Catholic Church including the Armenian Uniates, Jacobite Uniates, and Chaldeans; (c) mixed bodies of Protestant converts, New Chaldeans, and Orthodox Armenians.

Catholic:

Latin Rite: Most Rev. ERNEST NYARY, Archbishop of Baghdad, Alwiyah 23/1/31, Baghdad; approx. 3,500 adherents.

Armenian Rite: Archbishop of Baghdad: P.O.B. 2344, Baghdad; Most Rev. JEAN KASPARIAN.

Chaldean Rite: Archbishop of Mosul, Most Rev. EMMANUEL DADDI; Patriarch of Babylon of the Chaldeans: His Beatitude PAUL II CHEIKHO, with 15 Archbishops and Bishops in Iraq, Iran, Syria, Turkey and Lebanon. Approx. 475,000 adherents.

Syrian Rite: Archbishop of Mosul: Most Rev. CYRIL EMANUEL BENNI; Archbishop of Baghdad: Most Rev. ATHANASE J. D. BAKOSE; approx. 35,000 adherents.

Orthodox Syrian Community: 12,000 adherents.

Armenian Orthodox (Gregorian) Community: 23,000 adherents, mainly in Baghdad; Primate: Archimandrite AVAK ASADOURIAN; Primate of the Armenian Diocese, Younis Al-Saba'awi Square, Baghdad.

JUDAISM

Unofficial estimates put the present size of the community at 2,500, almost all living in Baghdad.

OTHERS

About thirty thousand Yazidis and a smaller number of Turkomans, Sabeans, and Shebeks make up the rest of the population.

Sabean Community: 20,000 adherents; Head Sheikh DAKHIL, Nasiriyah; Mandeans, mostly in Nasiriyah.

Yazidis: 30,000 adherents; Leader TASHIN BAIK, Ainsifi.

ISRAEL

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The State of Israel lies at the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea. All its frontiers are with Arab countries, the longest being with Egypt to the west and Jordan to the east. Lebanon lies to the north and Syria to the north-east. The climate is Mediterranean, with hot dry summers, when the temperature is generally around 30°-35°C, and mild, rainy winters. The language is Hebrew. Arabic is spoken by the half million Arab minority (as well as the population of the "occupied areas") and many European languages are spoken. Judaism is the religion followed by the great majority of the population. The national flag (proportions 250 by 173) consists of a white background, with a blue six-pointed star composed of two equilateral triangles (the "Shield of David") between two blue horizontal stripes near the upper and lower edges. The capital is Jerusalem.

Recent History

Before 1948 Palestine (of which present-day Israel now forms a part) was a Mandated Territory under British colonial administration. Zionists had long sought to establish a National Home in Palestine; the flow of Jewish immigration, and Arab concern over the position of the Palestinians and the impending creation of a Jewish state, finally led to war between Arabs and Jews in 1947. In November 1947 a UN resolution called for the partition of Palestine into two states, one Jewish and one Arab. The Arab states and the Palestinian Arab leadership rejected the UN resolution, and fighting intensified. On May 14th, 1948, the United Kingdom terminated its Palestine mandate and Jewish leaders immediately proclaimed the State of Israel, with David Ben-Gurion as Prime Minister. Although the new nation had no agreed frontiers, it quickly received wide international recognition. However, the neighbouring Arab states sent forces into Palestine in an attempt to crush Israel. Fighting continued until January 1949. The cease-fire agreements left Israel in control of 75 per cent of Palestine, including West Jerusalem. Most of the remainder was occupied by Jordan. A UN Truce Supervisory Organization continues to operate. The Six-Day War between Israel and neighbouring Arab countries in June 1967 left Israel in possession of all Jerusalem, the west bank of the Jordan, the Sinai peninsula in Egypt, the Gaza Strip (under Egyptian occupation since 1949) and the Golan Heights in Syria. East Jerusalem was almost immediately integrated into the state of Israel, the other regions being regarded as "occupied areas". There is considerable freedom of movement between the occupied areas and restricted access to and from the state of Jordan.

Ben-Gurion resigned in June 1963 and was succeeded by Levi Eshkol, formerly Minister of Finance. Three of the parties in the ruling coalition merged to form the Israel Labour Party in 1968. On the death of Eshkol in February 1969 Mrs. Golda Meir, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, was elected Prime Minister by the Labour Party executive. She continued in office following the general elections of October 1969 and December 1973. In August 1970 a cease-fire was arranged between Egypt and Israel which ended the two years of war of attrition in the Suez Canal zone but other Arab states and the Palestine guerrilla organizations continued their hostilities. Another war between the Arab states and Israel broke out on October 6th, 1973 (Yom Kippur), and ended with a cease-fire agreement in November. A disengagement agreement with Syria on the Golan Heights was signed in May 1974. A further disengagement agreement between Israel and Egypt was signed in September 1975.

Little progress towards permanent peace was made until November 1977, when President Sadat of Egypt visited Israel and addressed the Knesset. The move was a tacit recognition by Egypt of the State of Israel and a hopeful pointer to peace. In spite of meetings at various levels, however, no real advance towards peace took place until September 1978, when President Jimmy Carter of the U.S.A., President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin met at Camp David in the U.S.A. and drew up two agreements. The first was a "framework for peace in the Middle East", providing for autonomy for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip after a transitional period of five years, and the second was a "framework for the conclusion of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel" which was subsequently signed in Washington on March 26th, 1979. A phased withdrawal from Sinai has gone according to plan, with the final Israeli withdrawal due to take place in April 1982. There has, however, been considerable wrangling over the composition of the multinational peace-keeping force to be stationed in Sinai. Little progress has been made on Palestinian autonomy. The passing in the Knesset in July 1980 of a Bill which stated explicitly that Jerusalem should be for ever the undivided capital of Israel and Israel's formal annexation of the Golan Heights in December 1981 have contributed to a climate in which prospects for advances on this issue are slight. Other inhibiting factors have been the Israeli policy of promoting Jewish settlements on the West Bank, and a military confrontation with Syria in mid-1981 over Syrian intervention in Lebanese affairs.

Internally, Gen. Yitzhak Rabin had succeeded Mrs. Golda Meir as Prime Minister of a Labour alignment coalition after Mrs. Meir's resignation in June 1974. In December 1976 Rabin lost the support of the National Religious Party (NRP) and subsequently resigned, continuing in office in a caretaker capacity until May 1977, when the Labour alignment was unexpectedly defeated in the general election. Likud, under Menachem Begin, was able to form a government in June 1977 with the support of the NRP, Agudat Israel, Shlomzion and, later, the Democratic Movement for Change (DMC). Begin's inability to withstand pressure from the Gush Emunim movement to foster Jewish settlements on the West Bank caused several resignations from his coalition. Rampant inflation, which the Government seemed unable to control, further weakened Begin's position and in January 1981 he decided to call general elections in June instead of waiting until November 1981.

As the elections approached, Begin's belligerent stance over the threat of Syrian missiles in the Lebanon in June, and the efforts of a new Minister of Finance, Yoram

ISRAEL

Aridor, in slowing down the rise in the cost of living by increasing government subsidies, resulted in an unexpected swing in his favour and, although the election results were close, Begin was able to present a new coalition to the Knesset in early August. This was possible only by making an agreement with the religious parties, in particular Agudat Israel, by which numerous undertakings on religious observance, affecting most aspects of everyday life, were guaranteed. Although these measures were welcomed by orthodox zealots, other more secular elements in Israeli society found them unwelcome.

Government

Supreme authority in Israel rests with the Knesset (Assembly), with 120 members elected by universal suffrage for four years, using proportional representation. The President, a constitutional Head of State, is elected by the Knesset for five years. Executive power lies with the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister. The Cabinet takes office after receiving a vote of confidence in the Knesset, to which it is responsible. Ministers are usually members of the Knesset, but non-members may be appointed.

The country is divided into six administrative districts. Local authorities are elected once every four years at the same time as the Knesset. There are 31 municipalities (two Arab), 115 local councils (46 Arab and Druze) and 49 regional councils (one Arab) comprising representatives of 700 villages.

Defence

The Israel Defence Forces consist of a small nucleus of commissioned and non-commissioned regular officers, a contingent called up for national service, and a large reserve. Some unmarried women between the ages of 18 and 26 are called up for twenty-four months of military service, and all men between 18 and 29 are called up for 36 months of military service. Total armed forces numbered 172,000 (120,300 conscripts) in July 1981 and full mobilization of 400,000 men can be achieved in about 24 hours. The armed forces are divided into an army of 135,000, a navy of 9,000 and an air force of 28,000. The defence budget for 1981 amounted to 62,940 million shekels.

Economic Affairs

Six per cent of the labour force is employed in agriculture and 30.6 per cent in industry, mining and construction. Continuous immigration and an Arab economic boycott have obliged Israel to develop both agriculture and industry on an intensive scale and to seek far afield for international trade. Particular features of agriculture are the kibbutzim (collective settlements), the irrigation schemes and the reclamation of the Negev desert in the south. Citrus fruit is the main export crop. A wide variety of industrial goods is produced. Israel is second only to Belgium in processing diamonds. Some 15 per cent of industry is controlled by the Histadrut (Israel Federation of Labour) which, in addition to its trade union activity, fosters economic development. Israel receives aid from Jews in North America and Europe.

During recent years the high cost of imports, particularly defence imports and oil, has put the economy under strain. A high trade deficit, a fall in investment, slower G.N.P. growth and rapid inflation (consumer prices rose by 34.6 per cent in 1977, by 50.6 per cent in 1978, by 78.3 per cent in 1979 and by 131.0 per cent in 1980) are some of the difficulties which have been facing the Government. The Labour Government followed a policy of devaluation coupled with austerity measures. The Begin Government abolished foreign currency controls, allowed the pound (replaced by the shekel in 1980) to float, and reduced subsidies. Inflation gathered pace, however, and in November 1979 Begin brought in Yigael Horowitz as Finance Minister to strengthen the economy. He was unable to secure the cuts he wanted, and resigned in early January 1981. The new Minister, Yoram Aridor, increased government subsidies and brought the monthly rate of inflation down to about 6 per cent in the early months of 1981. In September, however, subsidies were cut and the Israeli Treasury forecast that the annual rate of inflation for 1981 would reach 110 per cent.

Another alarming feature has been the increase in immigration, which was reported as 510,528 for the decade 1969-79, compared with 384,064 arrivals.

Transport and Communications

The Israel Railway Administration runs 550 km. of main line. Ultimately Eilat, the port on the Gulf of Aqaba, will be served by rail. 3,918 km. of roads are metalled and about 525,000 motor vehicles are in service. Communications with the Arab countries are severely limited, but have been restored with Egypt. In 1978 Israel had a merchant fleet of 94 vessels with a gross tonnage of 2,314,100. El Al Israel Airlines operate international services and Arkia Israel Inland Airlines provide domestic route coverage.

Social Welfare

There is a highly advanced system of social welfare. Old age pensions, industrial injury and maternity benefits, and allowances for large families, are provided under the National Insurance Law. The Histadrut, to which over 90 per cent of all Jewish workers belong, provides sickness benefit and medical care. The Ministry of Social Welfare provides for general assistance, relief grants, child care and other social services. In 1979 there were 141 hospitals (58 of which were private), with 27,556 beds.

Education

Israel has European standards of literacy and educational services. Free compulsory primary education is provided for all children between the ages of five and fifteen. There is secondary, vocational and agricultural education. There are six universities, one institute of technology and one graduate school of science.

Tourism

Israel's tourist attractions include biblical sites, places holy to three religions, sunny beaches and kibbutzim (collective settlements). The Government maintains 20 tourist offices abroad. About 1,177,000 tourists visited Israel in 1980.

Public Holidays

The Sabbath starts at sunset on Friday and ends at nightfall on Saturday. The Jewish year 5743 begins on September 18th, 1982.

1982: May 29th-30th (Shavuot), September 18th (Rosh Hashanah, Jewish New Year), September 28th (Yom Kippur), October 3rd-10th (Succot—half-day holidays), October 11th (Simhat Torah).

1983: February 28th (Purim), March 30th-April 5th (Passover).

(The Jewish festivals and fast days commence on the evening preceding the dates given.)

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 new agorot = 1 shekel.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 28.85 shekels;
U.S. $1 = 15.00 shekels.

FINANCE

100 new agorot (singular: agora)=1 shekel.

Coins: 1, 5, 10 and 50 agorot.

Notes: 1, 5, 10 and 50 shekels.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=28.85 shekels; U.S. $1=15.00 shekels.

100 shekels=£3.47=$6.67.

Note: The shekel was introduced in February 1980, replacing the Israeli pound at the rate of 1 shekel=1£10. The Israeli pound had been introduced in August 1948, replacing (at par) the Palestine pound, equal to the pound sterling, then worth U.S. $4.03. In September 1949 the Israeli pound was devalued (in line with sterling) to $2.80 and this valuation remained in effect until February 1952. Multiple exchange rates were in operation between February 1952 and mid-1955. The official exchange rate was U.S. $1=1£1.80 (1£1=55.56 U.S. cents) from July 1955 to February 1962; $1=1£3.00 (1£1=33.33 U.S. cents) from February 1962 to November 1967; $1=1£3.50 (1£1=28.57 U.S. cents) from November 1967 to August 1971; $1=1£4.20 (1£1=23.81 U.S. cents) from August 1971 to November 1974; $1=1£6.00 (1£1=16.67 U.S. cents) from November 1974 to June 1975. Since June 1975 the currency has been frequently devalued. In July 1976 the Israeli pound was linked to a "basket" of five currencies of the country's main trading partners, instead of being linked to the U.S. dollar alone, and since October 1977 the currency has been allowed to "float". The average market rate (1£ per U.S. $) was: 4.50 in 1974; 6.39 in 1975; 7.98 in 1976; 10.46 in 1977; 17.47 in 1978; 25.44 in 1979. At the time of the shekel's introduction the exchange rate was $1=1£39, so the initial rate for the new currency was: $1=3.9 shekels. The average rate in 1980 was $1=5.124 shekels. The exchange rate was £1 sterling=1£8.40 from February 1962 to August 1971; and £1 sterling=1£10.944 from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

There is no written Constitution. In June 1950, the Knesset voted to adopt a State Constitution by evolution over an unspecified period. A number of laws, including the Law of Return (1950), the Nationality Law (1952), the State President (Tenure) Law (1952), the Education Law (1953) and the "Yad-va-Shem" Memorial Law (1953) are considered as incorporated into the State Constitution. Other constitutional laws are: The Law and Administration Ordinance (1948), the Knesset Election Law (1951), the Law of Equal Rights for Women (1951), the Judges Act (1953), the National Service and National Insurance Acts (1953), and the Basic Law (The Knesset) (1958).

The President

The President is elected by the Knesset for five years.

Ten or more Knesset Members may propose a candidate for the Presidency.

Voting will be by secret ballot.

The President may not leave the country without the consent of the Government.

The President may resign by submitting his resignation in writing to the Speaker.

The President may be relieved of his duties by the Knesset for misdemeanour.

The Knesset is entitled to decide by a two-thirds majority that the President is incapacitated owing to ill-health to fulfil his duties permanently.

The Speaker of the Knesset will act for the President when the President leaves the country, or when he cannot perform his duties owing to ill-health.

The Knesset

The Knesset is the parliament of the State. There are 120 members.

It is elected by general, national, direct, equal, secret and proportional elections.

Every Israeli national of 18 years or over shall have the right to vote in elections to the Knesset unless a court has deprived him of that right by virtue of any law.

Every Israeli national of 21 and over shall have the right to be elected to the Knesset unless a court has deprived him of that right by virtue of any law.

The following shall not be candidates: the President of the State; the two Chief Rabbis; a judge (shofet) in office; a judge (dayan) of a religious court; the State Comptroller; the Chief of the General Staff of the Defence Army of Israel; rabbis and ministers of other religions in office; senior State employees and senior Army officers of such ranks and in such functions as shall be determined by law.

The term of office of the Knesset shall be four years.

The elections of the Knesset shall take place on the third Tuesday of the month of Cheshven in the year in which the tenure of the outgoing Knesset ends.

Election day shall be a day of rest, but transport and other public services shall function normally.

Results of the elections shall be published within fourteen days.

The Knesset shall elect from among its members a Chairman and Vice-Chairman.

The Knesset shall elect from among its members permanent committees, and may elect committees for specific matters.

The Knesset may appoint commissions of inquiry to investigate matters designated by the Knesset.

The Knesset shall hold two sessions a year; one of them shall open within four weeks after the Feast of the Tabernacles, the other within four weeks after Independence Day; the aggregate duration of the two sessions shall not be less than eight months.

The outgoing Knesset shall continue to hold office until the convening of the incoming Knesset.

The members of the Knesset shall receive a remuneration as provided by law.

The Government

The Government shall tender its resignation to the President immediately after his election, but shall continue with its duties until the formation of a new Government.

After consultation with representatives of the parties in the Knesset, the President shall charge one of the Members with the formation of a Government.

The Government shall be composed of a Prime Minister and a number of Ministers from among the Knesset Members or from outside the Knesset.

After it has been chosen, the Government shall appear before the Knesset and shall be considered as formed after having received a vote of confidence.

Within seven days of receiving a vote of confidence, the Prime Minister and the other Ministers shall swear allegiance to the State of Israel and its Laws and undertake to carry out the decisions of the Knesset.

THE JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL

P.O.B. 92, Jerusalem.

Organization:

The governing bodies are the Assembly which determines basic policy, the Board of Governors which sets policy for the Agency between Assembly meetings and the Executive responsible for the day to day running of the Agency.

Chairman of Executive: ARYE L. DULZIN.

Chairman of Board of Governors: MAX M. FISHER.

Director-General: SHMUEL LAHIS.

Secretary-General: HARRY M. ROSEN.

Functions:

According to the Agreement of 1971, the Jewish Agency undertakes the immigration and absorption of immigrants in Israel, including absorption in agricultural settlement and immigrant housing; social welfare and health services in connection with immigrants; education, youth care and training; neighbourhood rehabilitation through project renewal.

Budget (1979/80): U.S. $405 million.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The law of Israel is composed of Ottoman law, British law, Palestine law, applicable in Palestine on May 14th, 1948, when the independence of the State of Israel was declared, the substance of the common law and doctrines of equity in force in England, as modified to suit local conditions, and religious law of the various recognized religious communities as regards matters of personal status, in so far as there is nothing in any of the said laws repugnant to Israeli legislation and subject to such modifications as may have resulted from the establishment of the State of Israel and its authorities, and also of the laws enacted by the Israeli legislature. The pre-1948 law is increasingly being replaced by original local legislation.

CIVIL COURTS

The Supreme Court is the highest judicial instance in the State. It has jurisdiction as an Appellate Court from the District Courts in all matters, both civil and criminal (sitting as a Court of Civil Appeal or as a Court of Criminal Appeal), and as a Court of First Instance (sitting as a High Court of Justice) in matters in which it considers it necessary to grant relief in the interests of justice and which are not within the jurisdiction of any other court or tribunal. This includes applications for orders in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition and certiorari, and enables the court to review the legality of acts of administrative authorities of all kinds.

President of the Supreme Court: M. LANDAU.

Permanent Deputy President of the Supreme Court: I. KAHAN.

Justices of the Supreme Court: M. SHANGAR, M. BEN-PORAT, M. EYLON, M. COHN, A. BARAK, M. BEISKI, SH. LEWIN.

Chief Registrar: Judge D. BARTOV (relieving president District Court).

The District Courts: Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv-Jaffa, Haifa, Beersheba, Nazareth. They have unlimited jurisdiction as Courts of First Instance in all civil and criminal matters not within the jurisdiction of a Magistrates' Court, all matters not within the exclusive jurisdiction of any other tribunal, and matters within the concurrent jurisdiction of any other tribunal so long as such tribunal does not deal with them, and as an Appellate Court in appeals from judgments and decisions of Magistrates' Courts and judgments of Municipal Courts and various administrative tribunals.

Magistrates' Courts: There are 26 Magistrates' Courts, having criminal jurisdiction to try contraventions and misdemeanours, and civil jurisdiction to try actions concerning possession or use of immovable property, or the partition thereof whatever may be the value of the subject matter of the action, and other civil actions where the amount of the claim, or the value of the subject matter, does not exceed 1½150,000.

Labour Courts: Established in 1969. Regional Labour Courts in Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, Haifa and Beersheba, composed of Judges and representatives of the Public. A National Labour Court in Jerusalem, presided over by Judge Z. Bar-Niv. The Courts have jurisdiction over all matters arising out of the relationship between employer and employee; between parties to a collective labour agreement; matters concerning the National Insurance Law and the Labour Law and Rules.

Municipal Courts: There are 5 Municipal Courts, having criminal jurisdiction over any offences against municipal regulations and by-laws and certain other offences, such as town planning offences, committed within the municipal area.

RELIGIOUS COURTS

The Religious Courts are the Courts of the recognized religious communities. They are competent in certain defined matters of personal status concerning members of their community. Where any action of personal status involves persons of different religious communities the President of the Supreme Court will decide which Court shall have jurisdiction. Whenever a question arises as to whether or not a case is one of personal status within the exclusive jurisdiction of a Religious Court, the matter must be referred to a Special Tribunal composed of two Justices of the Supreme Court and the President of the highest court of the religious community concerned in Israel.

The judgments of the Religious Courts are executed by the process and offices of the Civil Courts.

Jewish Rabbinical Courts: These Courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Jews in Israel who are Israeli citizens or residents. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned.

Muslim Religious Courts: These Courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Muslims who are not foreigners, or who are foreigners subject by their national law to the jurisdiction of Muslim Religious Courts in such matters. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned.

Christian Religious Courts: The Courts of the recognized Christian communities have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of members of their communities who are not foreigners. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned. But neither these Courts nor the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage of a foreign subject.

Druze Courts: These Courts, established in 1963, have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Druze in Israel, who are Israeli citizens or residents, and concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts in all other matters of personal status of Druze with the consent of all parties concerned.

MILITARY COURTS

Courts-Martial: A Court-Martial is competent to try a soldier within the meaning of the Military Justice Law, 1955, who has committed an act constituting a military offence, without prejudice to the power of any other Court in the State to try him for that act if it constitutes an offence under any other law. A Court-Martial is also competent to try a soldier for any offence which is not a military offence, but the Attorney General may order that he be tried by another Court if he is of the opinion that the offence was not committed within the framework of the Army or in consequence of the accused's belonging to the Army.

RELIGION

JUDAISM

Judaism, the religion evolved and followed by the Jews, is the faith of the great majority of the population. Its basis is a belief in an ethical monotheism.

There are two main Jewish communities: the Ashkenazim and the Sephardim. The former are the Jews from Eastern, Central, or Northern Europe, while the latter originate from the Balkan countries, North Africa and the Middle East. Although they have separate synagogues, and differ somewhat in their ritual and pronunciation of Hebrew, there is no doctrinal distinction. The prevailing influence is that of the Ashkenazim Jews, who are more modern and westernized, but the recent Hebrew revival has been based on the Sephardi pronunciation of the ancient Hebrew tongue.

The supreme religious authority is vested in the Chief Rabbinate, which consists of the Ashkenazi and Sephardi Chief Rabbis and the Supreme Rabbinical Council. It makes decisions on interpretation of the Jewish law, and supervises the Rabbinical Courts. There are 8 regional Rabbinical Courts, and a Rabbinical Court of Appeal presided over by the two Chief Rabbis.

According to the Rabbinical Courts Jurisdiction Law of 1953, marriage and divorce among Jews in Israel are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Rabbinical Courts. Provided that all the parties concerned agree, other matters of personal status can also be decided by the Rabbinical Courts.

There are 195 Religious Councils, which maintain religious services and supply religious needs, and about 405 religious committees with similar functions in smaller settlements. Their expenses are borne jointly by the State and the local authorities. The Religious Councils are under the administrative control of the Ministry of Religious Affairs. In all matters of religion, the Religious Councils are subject to the authority of the Chief Rabbinate. There are 365 officially appointed rabbis. The total number of synagogues is about 7,000, most of which are organized within the framework of the Union of Israel Synagogues.

Head of the Ashkenazi Community: The Chief Rabbi SHLOMO GOREN.

Head of the Sephardic Community: The Chief Rabbi OVADIA YOSSEF.

Two Jewish sects still loyal to their distinctive customs are:

The Karaites, a sect which recognizes only the Jewish written law and not the oral law of the Mishna and Talmud. The community of about 12,000 many of whom live in or near Ramla, has been augmented by immigration from Egypt.

The Samaritans, an ancient sect mentioned in 2 Kings xvii, 24. They recognize only the Torah. The community in Israel numbers about 500; about half of them live in Holon, where a Samaritan synagogue has been built, and the remainder, including the High Priest live in Nablus, near Mt. Gerizim, which is sacred to the Samaritans.

ISLAM

The Muslims in Israel are in the main Sunnis, and are divided among the four rites of the Sunni school of Muslim thought: the Shafe'i, the Hanbali, the Hanafi, and the Maliki. Before June 1967 they numbered approximately 175,000; in 1971, approximately 343,900.

Mufti of Jerusalem: Sheikh SAAD ED-DIN AL-ALAMI.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITIES

The Greek Melkite Church: P.O.B. 279, Haifa; numbers about 41,000 and Haifa is the seat of the Archbishop of Acre, Haifa, Nazareth and all Galilee; Archbishop MAXIMOS SALLOUM; publ. Ar-Rabita (Arabic monthly); circ.

The Greek Orthodox Church in Israel has approximately 22,000 members. Patriarch of Jerusalem THEODOROS.

The Latin (Roman Catholic) Church has about 10,000 native members in Israel plus about 2,000 Polish and Hungarian Catholic refugees. The Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem is His Beatitude JAMES JOSEPH BELTRITTI; Representative in Israel H.E. Bishop HANNA KALDANY.

The Maronite Community, with 6,350 members, has communal centres in Isfiya, Haifa, Jaffa, Jish, Nazareth and Jerusalem. The Maronite Patriarch, Mgr. JOSEPH KHOURY, resides in the Lebanon. The Vicar-General, Mgr. AUGUSTIN HARFOUCHE, is resident in Jaffa.

Episcopal Church in Jerusalem and the Middle East, belongs to the Anglican Communion; was reorganized in 1976; has Jerusalem Diocese and also Diocese of Iran, Egypt, Cyprus and the Gulf; Presiding Bishop Rt. Rev. HASSAN DEHQANI-TAFTI, P.O.B. 12, Isfahan, Iran (in exile in Winchester diocese, England).

Other denominations include the Armenian Church (900 members), the Coptic Church (700 members), the Russian Orthodox Church, which maintains an Ecclesiastical Mission, the Ethiopian Church, and the Baptist Lutheran and Presbyterian Churches.

THE PRESS

Tel-Aviv is the main publishing centre, only three dailies being published in Jerusalem. Largely for economic reasons there has developed no local press away from these cities; hence all papers regard themselves as national. Friday editions, Sabbath eve, are increased to up to twice the normal size by special weekend supplements, and experience a considerable rise in circulation. No newspapers appear on Saturday.

Most of the daily papers are in Hebrew, and others appear in Arabic, English, French, Polish, Yiddish, Hungarian and German. The total daily circulation is 500,000-600,000 copies, or twenty-one papers per hundred people, although most citizens read more than one daily paper.

Most Hebrew morning dailies have strong political or religious affiliations. Al Hamishmar is affiliated to Mapam, Hatzofeh to the National Religious Front—World Mizrahi. Davar is the long-established organ of the Histadrut. Mapai publishes the weekly Ol. Most newspapers depend on subsidies from political parties, religious organizations or public funds. The limiting effect on freedom of commentary entailed by this party press system has provoked repeated criticism.

The Jerusalem Arabic daily Al Anba has a small circulation (10,000) but an increasing number of Israeli Arabs are now reading Hebrew dailies. The daily, Al Quds, was founded in 1968 for Arabs in Jerusalem and the West Bank; the small indigenous press of occupied Jordan has largely ceased publication or transferred operations to Amman.

There are around 400 other newspapers and magazines including some 50 weekly and 150 fortnightly; over 250 of them are in Hebrew, the remainder in eleven other languages.

The most influential and respected dailies, for both quality of news coverage and commentary, are Ha'aretz and the trade union paper, Davar, which frequently has articles by government figures. These are the widest read of the morning papers, exceeded only by the popular afternoon press, Ma'ariv and Yedioth Aharonoth. The Jerusalem Post gives detailed and sound news coverage in English.

The Israeli Press Council, established in 1963, deals with matters of common interest to the Press such as drafting the recently published code of professional ethics which is binding on all journalists.

The Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association represents publishers in negotiations with official and public bodies, negotiates contracts with employees and purchases and distributes newsprint, of which Israel now manufactures 75 per cent of her needs

THE HISTADRUT

Hahistadrut Haklalit shel Haovdim Beereiz Israel, 93 Arlosoroff St., Tel-Aviv

(GENERAL FEDERATION OF LABOUR IN ISRAEL)

Secretary-General: YERUHAM MESHEL.

The General Federation of Labour in Israel, usually known as the Histadrut, is the largest voluntary organization in Israel, and the most important economic body in the State. It is open to all workers, including members of co-operatives and of the liberal professions, who join directly as individuals. The Histadrut engages in four main fields of activity: trade union organization; economic development; social insurance based on mutual aid; and educational and cultural activities. Dues—3.9 per cent of wages (up to ₪11,000 per month)—cover all its trade union, health and social services activities. The Histadrut was founded in 1920.

ORGANIZATION

In 1980 the Histadrut had a membership of 1,600,000, including over 160,000 in collective, co-operative and private villages (kibbutzim and moshavim) affiliated through the Agricultural Workers' Union, and 390,000 wives (who have membership status); 140,000 of the members were Arabs. In addition some 110,000 young people under 18 years of age belong to the Organization of Working and Student Youth, a direct affiliate of the Histadrut. The main religious labour organizations, Histadrut Hapoel Hamizrachi and Histadrut Poalei Agudat Israel, belong to the trade union section and welfare services, which thus extend to 90 per cent of all workers in Israel.

All members take part in elections to the Histadrut

Convention (Veida), which elects the General Council (Moetsa) and the Executive Committee (Vaad HaPoel). The latter elects the 36-member Executive Bureau (Vaada Merakezet), which is responsible for day-to-day implementation of policy. The Executive Committee also elects the Secretary-General, who acts as its chairman as well as head of the organization as a whole and chairman of the Executive Bureau. Nearly all political parties are represented on the Histadrut Executive Committee. Throughout Israel there are 68 local Labour Councils.

The Executive Committee has the following departments: Trade Union, Arab Affairs, Mutual Security Centre, Organization, International, Finance, Legal, Employment, Vocational Training, Absorption and Development, Academic Workers, Culture and Education, Institute of Economic and Social Research, Diaspora Communities, Youth and Sport, Consumers' Authority, Industrial Democracy, Religious Affairs and Higher Education.

TRADE UNION ACTIVITIES

Collective agreements with employers fix wage scales, which are linked with the retail price index; provide for social benefits, including paid sick leave and employers' contributions to sick and pension and provident funds; and regulate dismissals. Dismissal compensation is regulated by law. The Histadrut actively promotes productivity through labour management boards and the National Productivity Institute, and supports incentive pay schemes.

There are unions for the following groups: clerical workers, building workers, teachers, engineers, agricultural workers, technicians, textile workers, printing workers, diamond workers, metal workers, food and bakery workers, wood workers, government employees, seamen, nurses, civilian employees of the armed forces, actors, musicians and variety artists, social workers, watchmen, cinema technicians, institutional and school staffs, pharmacy employees, medical laboratory workers, X-ray technicians, physiotherapists, social scientists, microbiologists, psychologists, salaried lawyers, pharmacists, physicians, occupational therapists, truck and taxi drivers, hotel and restaurant workers, workers in Histadrut-owned industry, garment, shoe and leather workers, plastic and rubber workers, editors of periodicals, painters and sculptors and industrial workers.

ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES AND SOCIAL SERVICES

These include Hevrat Ovdim (Economic Sector, employing 260,000 workers in 1980), Kupat Holim (the Sick Fund, covering almost 75 per cent of Israel's population), seven pension funds, and NA'AMAT (women's organization which runs nursery homes and kindergartens, organizes vocational education and promotes legislation for the protection and benefit of working women).

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Israel State Railways: Central Station, P.O.B. 44, Haifa; all lines are managed and operated from Haifa. The total length of main line is 550 km.; gauge 1,435 mm.

Freight traffic consists mainly of grain, phosphates, potash, containers, oil and building materials. Rail service serves Haifa and Ashdod, ports on the Mediterranean Sea, while a combined rail-road service extends to Eilat port on the Red Sea. A rail link from Dimona to Eilat is planned. Passenger services operate between the main towns: Nahariya, Haifa, Tel-Aviv and Jerusalem.

Gen. Man. ZVI TSAFRIRI; Deputy Gen. Man. I. BARILAN; Deputy Gen. Man. (Admin.) L. HEYMAN.

UNDERGROUND RAILWAYS

Haifa Underground Funicular Railway: 12 Hanassi Ave. Haifa; opened 1959; 2 km. in operation; Man. D SCHARF.

Tel-Aviv Metropolitan Area Rapid Transit: Ministry of Transport, 3 Eliashberg St., Tel-Aviv; a feasibility study has been made on the possibility of building a 60 km. rapid transit line (8 km. underground).

ROADS

Ministry of Labour, Public Works Dept., Jerusalem.

There are 3,900 km. of metalled main roads not including roads in towns and settlements.

Automobile and Touring Club of Israel (MEMSI): 19 Petah Tiqva Rd., P.O.B. 36144, Tel-Aviv 61630; f. 1949; over 35,000 mems.; Dir.-Gen. B. YACOBI; publ. Annual Year Book.

SHIPPING

The Israel Ports Authority: Maya Building, 74 Petah Tiqva Rd., Tel-Aviv; f. 1961; to plan, build, develop, administer, maintain and operate the ports.

ZIM Israel Navigation Co. Ltd.: 209 Hameginim Ave., P.O.B. 1723, Haifa; f. 1945; runs cargo services in the Mediterranean and to N. Europe, N. and S. America, Far East, Africa and Australia; operates 58 ships totalling 2.3m. d.w.t.; Chair. D. ELAZAR; Man. Dir. Y. ROTHEN.

Haifa and Ashdod are the main ports in Israel. The former is a natural harbour, enclosed by two main breakwaters and dredged to 37 ft. below mean sea-level. In 1965 the new deep water port was completed at Ashdod which has a capacity of about 4 million tons per year.

The port of Eilat is Israel's gate to the Red Sea. It is a natural harbour, operated from a wharf. A new port, to the south of the original one, started operating in 1965.

CIVIL AVIATION

El Al Israel Airlines Ltd.: P.O.B. 41, Ben Gurion Airport, Lod, Tel-Aviv; f. 1949; daily services to most capitals of Europe; over twenty flights weekly to New York; services to the U.S.A., Canada, Egypt, Greece, Kenya, Mexico, Portugal, Romania, South Africa, Spain and Turkey; fleet of 4 Boeing 747-258B, 2 Boeing 747-258C, 2 Boeing 747-124F, 2 Boeing 707-458, 3 Boeing 707-358B, 2 Boeing 707-358C; (on order) 2 Boeing 737-200, 4 Boeing 767-200; Chair. ATOMIC ENERGY

Israel Atomic Energy Commission: 26 Rehov Hauniversita, Ramat Aviv, P.O.B. 17120, Tel-Aviv; f. 1952; advises the Government on long term policies and priorities in the advancement of nuclear research and development; supervises the implementation of policies approved by the government; including the licensing of nuclear power plants; represents Israel in its relations with scientific institutions abroad and international organizations engaged in nuclear research and development (Israel is a member of IAEA); Chair. The PRIME MINISTER; Dir.-Gen. UZI EILAM.

The Atomic Energy Commission has two research and development centres: the Soreq Nuclear Research Centre and the Negev Nuclear Research Centre near Dimona. The main fields of research are: nuclear physics and chemistry, reactor physics, reactor engineering, radiation research and applications, application of isotopes, metallurgy, electronics, radiobiology, nuclear medicine, nuclear power and desalination. The centres also provide national services: health physics including film badge service, isotope production and molecule labelling, activation analysis, irradiation, advice to industry and institutions, training of personnel, technical courses, documentation.

Soreq Nuclear Research Centre: Yavne; f. 1952; equipped with a swimming pool type research reactor IRR-1 of 5 MW thermal; Dir. A. ARBEL.

Negev Nuclear Research Centre: Dimona; equipped with a natural uranium fuelled and heavy water moderated reactor IRR-2 of 26 MW thermal; Dir. ABRAHAM SEROUSSI.

Weizmann Institute of Science: Rehovot; Department of Nuclear Physics engaged in research and graduate teaching in experimental and theoretical nuclear structure and elementary particle physics, critical phenomena and theoretical astrophysics, as well as in applied physics; the department operates three electrostatic accelerators, the largest being a 14 MV Pelletron; Head Prof. Z. FRAENKEL.

Department of Isotope Research engaged in research and teaching in a broad area, ranging from environmental research to brain chemistry, using isotope techniques; it also operates a product on-scale plant for the separation of o^{17} and o^{18} from o^{16} ; Head J. R. GAT.

Racah Institute of Physics: Faculty of Science, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Mount Scopus, Jerusalem; engages in research into atomic physics, microwaves, plasma and ionized gases, molecular, medical, solid state and theoretical physics.

Technion: Israel Institute of Technology: Haifa; the Dept. of Physics engages in undergraduate teaching in physics, as well as graduate teaching and research mainly in nuclear physics, high energy physics, foundations of quantum mechanics, atomic physics, relativity and astrophysics, solid state spectroscopy, very low temperature physics, phase transitions, semiconductor physics, magnetism and quantum optics; Chair. Dept. of Physics Prof. A. DAR; the Dept. of Nuclear Engineering undertakes teaching and graduate work in applied nuclear science and engineering; research groups work in the fields of theoretical and experimental nuclear reactor physics, neutron physics, nuclear desalination, heat transfer, nuclear radiations; Head, Nuclear Engineering Dept. Prof. A. NOTEA.

THE IVORY COAST

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of the Ivory Coast lies on the west coast of Africa, between Ghana to the east and Liberia to the west, with Guinea, Mali and Upper Volta to the north. The climate is hot and wet, with temperatures varying from 14° to 39°C (57° to 103°F). The official language is French and a large number of African languages are spoken. The majority of the population follows traditional beliefs; Christians, mainly Roman Catholic, make up 12 per cent of the population, and Muslims about 23 per cent. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is a vertical tricolour of orange, white and green. The capital is Abidjan.

Recent History

The Ivory Coast became an independent Republic in August 1960. Formerly a province of French West Africa, in 1958 it was declared to be a self-governing member of the French Community. In 1959 it joined with Dahomey (now Benin), Niger and Upper Volta to form the Conseil de l'Entente, a regional politico-economic association. Though it did not rejoin the French Community on attaining independence, it is closely bound to France.

The President, Félix Houphouët-Boigny, has been in power without formal opposition since before independence. His Parti démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire (PDCI) is the only political party. A high rate of economic growth and strong support from the French have contributed to the stability of the regime. Political unrest has occurred sporadically, though without strong leadership. Two plots were uncovered in 1963, apparently representing a youthful radical element and northerners who resented southern domination in the Government. The army was reduced in size to reduce the risk of military intervention. The Government responded to criticism by implementing a policy of regional development and increased Ivorian management of commercial enterprises.

In 1977 Houphouët-Boigny replaced the Ministers of Finance, Economic Planning and Foreign Affairs and passed a series of measures against trading corruption and commodity speculation. In May 1978 a significant step towards the relaxation of the PDCI's political dominance was taken when it was decided that, with the exception of Abidjan and Bouaké, the capitals of all the Departments would be administered by elected mayors, not party appointees. In October 1980 Houphouët-Boigny was re-elected unopposed for a fifth five-year term of office. Elections to the National Assembly were held in November and, for the first time, more than one candidate was permitted to contest each seat. In December 1980 the President escaped unhurt when a petrol bomb was thrown at his car during independence anniversary celebrations.

At the beginning of 1979 there was an outbreak of violence against the French population in the Ivory Coast, estimated to be 50,000, by a handful of extremists who resented France's dominating role in the country; underground opposition has continued. The number of foreigners resident in the Ivory Coast was over 1 million in 1981, leading to growing concern for the "Ivorianization" policy.

Houphouët-Boigny is committed to a policy of dialogue between black Africa and white-ruled South Africa, for which he has been strongly criticized by other African leaders. He is also outspokenly anti-Communist and has denounced Soviet intervention in African affairs. In 1977 agreements on joint projects, including a hydroelectric dam on the Cavally river, were signed with Liberia. In March 1978 long-standing disagreements with President Sekou Touré of Guinea were settled.

Strikes broke out in February 1981 among employees of the state corporations, following proposals to cut their salaries, and also in September among journalists seeking better conditions. Joint educational and telecommunications projects with Senegal were implemented, but the death of 46 Ghanaians in an Ivory Coast gaol in March 1981 caused a general deterioration in relations with neighbouring states.

Government

The Ivory Coast is a Republic with executive power vested in the President, who is elected for a five-year term by direct universal suffrage. The Council of Ministers is directly responsible to him. In 1980 provision was made for the appointment of a Vice-President. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, with 147 members directly elected (using two ballots if necessary) for five years. The ruling Parti démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire is the only political party. The country is divided into 26 Departments, each with its own elected Council.

Defence

Defence matters are the concern of the Regional Defence Council of the Conseil de l'Entente through which agreements with France have been negotiated. France supplies equipment and training. In July 1981 the Ivory Coast had 5,700 men in the army, 350 in the air force, 500 in the navy and a gendarmerie of 3,000.

Economic Affairs

Since independence the Ivory Coast has successfully developed its economy from a largely agricultural base, and 79 per cent of the labour force still work in the agricultural sector. From 1960 to 1970 G.D.P. grew at an average annual rate of 7.7 per cent. Between 1970 and 1978, despite the effects of the Sahelian drought, increased oil prices and world recession, annual growth averaged 7 per cent. In 1979, however, the rate fell below 2 per cent, and in 1980 below 1 per cent, largely as a result of lower world market prices for the three main exports, cocoa, coffee and timber. Several development projects were postponed and a radical reform of the state corporations was announced, in an effort to curb expenditure.

In the 1977/78 season the Ivory Coast overtook Ghana as the world's largest cocoa producer. The 1978/79 cocoa crop was down on previous years, but world market prices were so low that the Ivory Coast suspended exports, and began to stockpile the crop. This policy failed, however, as some stocks had to be sold at a loss. The crop reached 373,000 metric tons in 1979/80 and was expected to total a record 400,000 metric tons in 1980/81, but plans to boost production further were being cut in view of depressed world prices. Since 1975 the Ivory Coast has been the world's third largest producer of coffee (behind Brazil and Colombia). The 1980 crop was estimated at 245,000 metric tons.

Exports of cocoa, coffee and timber accounted for 74 per cent of total exports in 1980, but crop diversification is increasing, and some sugar is now exported. A soyabean programme began in 1980, with aid from Brazil. Priority is being given to the reforestation policy, which aims to prevent exhaustion of timber resources.

In 1977 the first significant petroleum deposits were discovered off the coast. The Belier field, 15 km. south of Grand Bassam, came on stream in 1980, and was expected to yield 20,000 b.p.d. by late 1982. In early 1980 the Espoir field was discovered offshore, with reserves estimated at 500 million tons, and the Ivory Coast is expected to be self-sufficient in oil by 1983. This would enable the country to reduce imports and stimulate the pharmaceuticals, textiles, paper and metal industries. There are large quantities of high-quality iron ore at Bangolo. Reserves of copper, nickel, molybdenum, cobalt and uranium have been discovered.

The share of agriculture in G.D.P. has declined from 43 per cent in 1960 to 25 per cent in 1980, but manufacturing increased its share from 8 per cent in 1960 to 24 per cent in 1979. Industrial development has been based on the processing of primary commodities before export. Most exported palm oil is now refined, and large quantities of fruit (particularly pineapple) are tinned or preserved. The 1981-85 development plan aims at a large increase in food production and also provides for cultural and social development, especially in town planning and commercial training.

Since 1977 the economy has suffered as commodity prices have weakened, initially for coffee and in 1980 for cocoa, while import prices, especially for oil, increased. As a result of heavy borrowing in the boom years, debt servicing has become a problem, with the debt service ratio increasing from 10 per cent of goods and services in 1976 to 25 per cent in 1980. The balance of payments deficit on current account increased from 3 per cent of G.D.P. in 1977 to 15 per cent in 1980. In March 1981 a comprehensive adjustment programme was drawn up with the help of the IMF. Remittances to the families of migrant workers, mainly from Mali and Upper Volta, place a strain on the Ivory Coast balance of payments.

Transport and Communications

A one-metre gauge railway runs to Upper Volta from Abidjan. The Ivory Coast has an extensive road system covering 45,350 km. (1980), of which over 7,000 km. are surfaced. In 1980 the World Bank granted a loan of U.S. $100 million towards the cost of the 1981-83 road investment programme. The lower courses of the rivers and the coastal lagoons are used for local transport. The chief ports are Abidjan and San Pedro. Work on the extension of Abidjan port began at the end of 1980. The Ivory Coast has a share in Air Afrique, and domestic services are provided by Air Ivoire.

Social Welfare

Medical services are organized by the State. In 1975 the country had 8,346 hospital beds and 321 physicians. There is a minimum wage (SMIG) for workers in industry and commerce. Projects to increase the social and health services to regional centres and villages are being carried out.

Education

Education at all levels is free and attendance at primary school is compulsory. On average, 75 per cent of children attend school, though in the towns there is over 90 per cent attendance. Televisual education for primary school children, begun in 1971, ceased in 1981 due to poor results. More than half of secondary teaching is undertaken by French nationals. The National University has five faculties, and in 1980 had over 12,000 students. Also, many students enrol at French universities.

Tourism

The game reserves, forests and lagoons, and the capital Abidjan, are all of interest to tourists and there were an estimated 170,000 visitors in 1978. The 10-km. coastal strip along the Lagune Ebrié to the west of Abidjan is being developed as a tourist riviera. In 1980 there were 6,300 hotel rooms in the Ivory Coast.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension), May 31st (Whit Monday), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 15th (Assumption), September 29th (Id ul Adha, feast of the Sacrifice), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 7th (Independence), December 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), April 1st (Good Friday), April 4th (Easter Monday).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 centimes = 1 franc de la Communauté financière africaine (CFA).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

1 franc CFA = 2 French centimes;
 £1 sterling = 545.6 francs CFA;
 U.S. $1 = 283.65 francs CFA.

THE CONSTITUTION

The following is a summary of the main provisions of the constitution promulgated on October 31st, 1960, and subsequently amended in June 1971, October 1975 and November 1980.

Preamble: The Republic of the Ivory Coast is one and indivisible. It is secular, democratic and social. Sovereignty belongs to the people who exercise it through their representatives or through referenda. There is universal, equal and secret suffrage. French is the official language.

Head of State: The President is elected for a 5-year term by direct universal suffrage and is eligible for re-election. He is Head of the Administration and the Armed Forces and has power to ask the National Assembly to reconsider a Bill, which must then be passed by two-thirds of the members of the Assembly; he may also have a Bill submitted to a referendum. In case of the death or incapacitation of the President his functions are carried out by an elected Vice-President.

Executive Power: Executive power is vested in the President. He appoints a Council of Ministers, who are responsible only to him. Any member of the National Assembly appointed minister must renounce his seat in the Assembly, but may regain it on leaving the Government.

Legislative Power: Legislative power is vested in a National Assembly of 147 members, elected for a 5-year term of office. Legislation may be introduced either by the President or by a member of the National Assembly.

Judicial Power: The independence of the judiciary is guaranteed by the President, assisted by a High Council of Judiciary.

Economic and Social Council: An advisory commission of 60 members appointed by the President because of their specialist knowledge or experience.

JAMAICA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Jamaica is an island in the Caribbean, 145 km. (90 miles) south of Cuba. Haiti is 160 km. (100 miles) to the east. The climate varies with altitude, being tropical at sea level and temperate in the mountain areas. Average temperature is 27°C (80°F) and mean annual rainfall is 198 cm. (78 inches). The language is English. The majority of the population belong to Christian churches, of which the Church of Jamaica and the Baptist Church are the strongest. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) consists of a diagonal gold cross on a black and green background. The capital is Kingston.

Recent History

Formerly a British colony, the island achieved internal self-government in 1959 and full independence in 1962. In 1958 Jamaica joined with Trinidad, Barbados, the Leeward Islands and the Windward Islands to form the West Indies Federation. Jamaica seceded in 1961, following a referendum, and the Federation broke up. The two dominant political figures after the Second World War were the late Sir Alexander Bustamante, leader of the Jamaica Labour Party (JLP), who retired as Prime Minister in 1967, and Norman Manley, a former Premier and leader of the People's National Party (PNP), who died in 1969.

The Labour Party won the elections of 1962 and 1967 but, under the premiership of Hugh Shearer, it lost the elections of February 1972 to the People's National Party, led by Michael Manley, the son of Norman Manley. Michael Manley was an advocate of democratic socialism and his government put great emphasis on social reform and economic independence.

The early 1970s were marked by escalating street violence and crime, with gang warfare rife in the slum areas of Kingston. Between January and June 1976 162 people were killed and in June the Government declared a state of public emergency. Despite the unrest, high unemployment, and severe economic stagnation, the PNP won the election of December 1976 with an increased majority. The state of emergency was lifted in June 1977. By January 1979, however, there was again widespread political unrest, and violent demonstrations signalled growing discontent with the Manley Government.

In February 1980, with a worsening economic crisis, Manley rejected the IMF's conditions for further loans to Jamaica and called a general election to seek support for his economic policies and his decision to end dependence on the IMF. Thirty officers of the Jamaica Defence Force and the leader of a small right-wing party were arrested in June, suspected of plotting to overthrow the Government. The electoral campaign was one of the most violent in Jamaica's history, with 500 killings between February and October, committed mainly by the rival political gangs of the Kingston slums. The level of violence dropped after a joint plea by Manley and Edward Seaga, leader of the opposition JLP, to their supporters for an end to the bloodshed, but killing continued even after the election. In contrast to the close result predicted, in the October elections the JLP gained a landslide victory by winning 51 of the 60 seats in the House of Representatives and Seaga was given an overwhelming mandate to implement his policies for a return to close economic links with the U.S.A. and the promotion of free enterprise.

Relations between the Seaga administration and Cuba have been strained and in October 1981 the Government abruptly severed diplomatic relations because Cuba had not complied with a request to extradite three Jamaican criminals.

Government

The Head of State is the British monarch, who is represented by a Governor-General appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister.

The legislature consists of a Senate of 21 members and a House of Representatives of 60 members. Thirteen members of the Senate are appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister and eight on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition. The House of Representatives is elected for five years by universal suffrage, the voting age being 18. Executive power lies with the Cabinet. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1981 Jamaica had a total defence force of some 4,000 men. Paramilitary forces numbered 8,200. There was a police force of 5,898 in 1978.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on sugar, bauxite and tourism. The major agricultural exchange earner is sugar, with molasses and rum as important by-products. Bananas, citrus fruits and coconuts are also cultivated. Extensive flooding of sugar and banana plantations in 1979 and the effects of Hurricane Allen in 1980 seriously reduced output. Production of raw sugar fell from 290,000 tons in 1978 to 279,000 tons in 1979 and, even further, to 220,000 tons in 1980. The Seaga Government has decided to disband the heavily indebted sugar co-operatives set up under the previous administration. Priority is being given to the expansion of agricultural capacity in order to earn vital foreign exchange.

Jamaica is the world's third largest producer of bauxite and alumina and has a policy of increased participation in bauxite processing, previously handled by American companies. In 1974 the Government increased the bauxite production levy on foreign-owned companies and concluded an agreement with the Kaiser Bauxite Company, which gave it a 51 per cent interest in the company's local mining assets. Similar agreements were concluded with Alcoa in 1976, with the Reynolds Metal Company in 1977 and with Alcan in 1978. A major agreement negotiated between the Government and the foreign companies in 1979 gave the Government a degree of control over all mining operations and a share in total alumina production. However, the production levy was to be reduced on output achieved by any company beyond a specified production level. By 1980 refineries were working to capacity and production, at 11.99 million metric tons, reached its highest level since 1974. In the second half of 1981 the five bauxite companies all announced production cutbacks in response to a sudden drop in world prices. New markets were secured for alumina exports in 1979 in Venezuela, the U.S.S.R., Algeria and Iraq. It was hoped that an order placed by the U.S.A. in December for 1.6 million metric tons of bauxite would delay the expected cutbacks.

Tourism is Jamaica's second largest foreign exchange earner. An influx of tourists in 1978 was followed by a record figure in 1979 but in 1980 the industry was again suffering the effects of political unrest in the capital. By 1981 it was showing some recovery and in August tourist arrivals were 15.5 per cent higher than at a year earlier.

Industry is expanding and covers cement, tobacco and a number of consumer goods. A joint consortium of American and Italian companies is to undertake exploration for petroleum off Jamaica's south-west coast. Trade is chiefly with the U.S.A., Canada and the United Kingdom.

A cumulative decline of 17 per cent in G.N.P. since 1972, an external debt of J$1.3 million and an unemployment rate of at least 30 per cent in 1980 reflect a prolonged recession in the Jamaican economy. Seaga's three-year economic recovery plan calls for a considerable injection of foreign investment into the private sector, and strenuous efforts during 1981 to attract this investment included the setting up of numerous business committees to promote investment by specific countries. However, by the end of 1981 only a very small number of projects had been finalized. Government policy had not succeeded in stemming the decline in export growth, with the visible trade deficit for the first six months of 1981 four times larger than for the equivalent period in 1980. Growth in G.D.P. for 1981 was revised down to about 0 per cent but this was compared with a fall in G.D.P. of 5.4 per cent for 1980. A major achievement of the plan has been the reduction of inflation from 29 per cent in 1980 to 7 per cent in 1981. The Government is denationalizing a number of public concerns, including a newspaper, the radio station and hotels.

Seaga renewed links with the IMF and negotiated a three-year loan of U.S. $698 million from June 1981. The terms of the loan included the removal of subsidies on many staple items and some form of pay restraint. The agreement with the IMF encouraged a renewed flow of aid from foreign donors and the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development committed U.S. $400 million in loans in 1981.

Jamaica is a member of the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Common Market (CARICOM), the International Bauxite Association and the Latin American Economic System (SELA). Jamaica is one of a group of Caribbean countries which are to receive oil on special credit terms from Mexico and Venezuela.

Transport and Communications

There are 330 km. (205 miles) of railway, including a line 180 km. (112 miles) long running diagonally across the island from Kingston to Montego Bay, 4,737 km. (2,944 miles) of main roads and 11,688 km. (7,264 miles) of parochial and subsidiary roads link towns and villages. The principal ports are Kingston and Montego Bay. There are two international airports. Jamaica has its own airline and is well served by a number of international airlines.

Social Welfare

Social welfare is undertaken by the Government; the Social Development Commission arranges and co-ordinates social welfare in the villages. Contributory national insurance and housing trust schemes are run by the Government. In 1978 there were 7,486 beds in government hospitals and the country had 720 physicians.

Education

Primary education is compulsory in certain districts and free education is ensured. Six of the eight faculties of the University of the West Indies are in Kingston. Adult illiteracy averaged 18.1 per cent (males 21.4 per cent, females 15.2 per cent) in 1970, but had fallen to 11 per cent by 1976 as a result of the Jamaica Movement for the Advancement of Literacy (JAMAL), established in 1972. The budgetary allocation for education for 1979/80 was J$245.9 million.

Tourism

Jamaica attracts many tourists, mainly from the U.S.A. In 1979 593,571 tourists visited the island. Revenue from tourism in 1980 was U.S. $195 million. Hotel proprietors receive tax concessions to encourage development.

Public Holidays

1982: May 24th (Labour Day), August 2nd (for Independence Day), October 18th (National Heroes' Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), February 16th (Ash Wednesday), April 1st (Good Friday), April 4th (Easter Monday).

Weights and Measures

The imperial system is in force but the metric system was being phased in in 1980.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Jamaican dollar (J$).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = J$3.427;

U.S. $1 = J$1.782.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution came into force at the independence of Jamaica on August 6th, 1962.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL

The Governor-General is appointed by The Queen and holds office during her pleasure.

THE LEGISLATURE

The Senate or Upper House consists of 21 Senators of whom 13 will be appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister and 8 by the Governor-General on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition.

The House of Representatives consists of 60 elected members called Members of Parliament.

A person is qualified for appointment to the Senate or for election to the House of Representatives if he is a citizen of Jamaica or other Commonwealth country, of the age of 21 or more and has been ordinarily resident in Jamaica for the immediately preceding twelve months.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL

The Privy Council consists of six members appointed by the Governor-General after consultation with the Prime Minister, of whom at least two are persons who hold or who have held public office. The functions of the Council are to advise the Governor-General on the exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy and on appeals on disciplinary matters from the three Service Commissions.

THE EXECUTIVE

The Prime Minister is appointed from the House of Representatives by the Governor-General as the person who, in his judgement, is best able to command the support of the majority of the members of that House.

The Leader of the Opposition is appointed by the Governor-General in his discretion as the member of the House of Representatives who, in his judgement, is best able to command the support of the majority of those members of the House who do not support the Government.

The Cabinet consists of the Prime Minister and not fewer than eleven other Ministers appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister.

THE JUDICATURE

The Judicature consists of a Supreme Court, a Court of Appeal and minor courts. Judicial matters, notably advice to the Governor-General on appointments, are considered by a Judicial Service Commission, the Chairman of which is the Chief Justice, members being the President of the Court of Appeal, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission and three others.

CITIZENSHIP

All persons born in Jamaica after Independence automatically acquire Jamaican citizenship and there is also provision for the acquisition of citizenship by persons born outside Jamaica of Jamaican parents. Persons born in Jamaica (or persons born outside Jamaica of Jamaican parents) before independence who immediately prior to independence were citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies also automatically become citizens of Jamaica.

Appropriate provision is made which permits persons who do not automatically become citizens of Jamaica to be registered as such.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

The Constitution includes provisions safeguarding the fundamental freedoms of the individual, irrespective of race, place of origin, political opinions, colour, creed or sex, subject only to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and for the public interest. The fundamental freedoms include the right of life, liberty, security of the person and protection from arbitrary arrest or restriction of movement, the enjoyment of property and the protection of the law, freedom of conscience, of expression and of peaceful assembly and association, and respect for private and family life.

JAPAN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Japan forms a curved chain of islands off the coast of east Asia. There are four large islands, named (from north to south) Hokkaido, Honshu, Shikoku and Kyushu, plus the Ryukyu Islands and many smaller islands. Hokkaido lies just to the south of the large Soviet island, Sakhalin, and about 1,300 km. east of the U.S.S.R.'s mainland port, Vladivostok. Southern Japan is about 150 km. east of Korea. Although summers are temperate everywhere, the climate in winter varies sharply from north to south. Typhoons and heavy rains are common in summer. The language is Japanese. The major religions are Shintoism and Buddhism and there is a minority of Christians. The national flag (proportions usually 3 by 2) consists of a red sun without rays on a white background. The capital is Tokyo.

Recent History

Following Japan's surrender in August 1945, ending the Second World War, the country was placed under U.S. military occupation. A new democratic constitution, which took effect from May 1947, renounced war and abandoned the doctrine of the Emperor's divinity. Following the peace treaty of September 1951, Japan regained its sovereignty in April 1952. Rival conservative political groups merged in November 1955 to form the Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP), which has held power ever since. The Bonin Islands and the Ryukyu Islands (including Okinawa), administered by the U.S.A. from 1945, were returned to Japan in June 1968 and May 1972 respectively. During 1981 there were renewed demands by the Japanese for the return of the Kurile Islands from the U.S.S.R.

American military support continues to be provided. During 1981 Japan came under renewed pressure from the U.S.A. to increase its defence spending (0.9 per cent of G.N.P. in 1980) and to assume greater responsibility for security in the Western Pacific area. Stability in South-East Asia is a vital consideration in foreign policy, since Japan depends on Asia for a third of its foreign trade as well as vital supplies of raw materials. In 1978 a treaty of peace and friendship was signed with the People's Republic of China.

In July 1972 the Prime Minister, Eisaku Sato, after holding office for eight years, resigned and was succeeded by Kakuei Tanaka. He resigned in December 1974 and was succeeded by Takeo Miki. In December 1976 the results of the general election, in which the LDP's majority was substantially reduced, forced Miki to resign, and he was replaced by Takeo Fukuda, a former Deputy Prime Minister.

In the Upper House election of July 1977 the LDP suffered another setback and in November Fukuda carried out a major reshuffle of the Cabinet, bringing in a number of economic experts. In the LDP presidential election of November 1978 Fukuda was unexpectedly defeated by Masayoshi Ohira, the LDP Secretary-General. Ohira was subsequently appointed Prime Minister, and a new Cabinet was formed. Lacking an overall majority in the Lower House and facing increasing opposition to proposed tax increases, the LDP legislative programme was seriously hindered. In the general election of October 1979 the LDP suffered a severe setback and significant gains were made by the Communists. Ohira survived a challenge to his leadership of the LDP but in May 1980 a motion of no-confidence proposed by the Japan Socialist Party (JSP) was carried and Ohira dissolved the Lower House. Ohira died before the elections of June 22nd in which the LDP gained a resounding victory. In July Zenko Suzuki, a relatively unknown compromise candidate, was elected President of the LDP and subsequently appointed Prime Minister.

Suzuki faced a series of crises during 1981, including a setback in relations with the U.S.A., criticism from the opposition over Japan's defence policy and the resignation of the Foreign Minister over the wording of a joint U.S.-Japanese communiqué. Economic tensions with the U.S.A. and the EEC heightened, owing to the continued growth of Japanese exports, and Japan voluntarily agreed to limit car sales to the U.S.A. and was seeking ways to ease the trade gap with the EEC. In November 1981 Suzuki carried out a major reshuffle of the Cabinet.

Government

Under the Constitution of 1946 the Emperor is Head of State but has no governing power. Legislative power is vested in the bicameral Diet, consisting of the House of Representatives (511 seats), whose members are elected for a four-year term, and the House of Councillors (252 seats), members of which are elected for six years, one half retiring every three years. There is universal suffrage at the age of 20. Executive power is vested in the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is appointed by the Emperor (on designation by the Diet) and himself appoints the other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to the Diet.

Japan has 47 prefectures, each administered by an elected Governor.

Defence

Although the Constitution renounces war and the use of force, the right of self-defence is not excluded and ground, maritime and air self-defence forces are maintained. Military service is voluntary. The U.S.A. provides equipment and training staff and also maintains bases. The total strength of the self-defence forces was estimated at 243,000 in July 1981: army 155,000, navy 44,000 and air force 44,000. Expenditure on defence for 1981/82 was 2,400,000 million yen.

Economic Affairs

Japan is not well endowed with natural resources. Over 67 per cent of the total land area is forested and, although self-sufficient in rice, the country has to import about 50 per cent of the other cereals and fodder crops consumed. Mineral resources are meagre, except for limestone and sulphur, and Japanese industry is heavily dependent on imported raw materials and fuels. Petroleum accounted for 41 per cent of Japan's import costs in 1980, and in 1981 the Government authorized the building of three nuclear and eight coal-fired power stations as part of a programme to reduce the country's dependence on imported petroleum.

Based on the promotion of manufacturing industries for the export market, Japan achieved and maintained a very high rate of economic growth after 1945. Gross national product (G.N.P.) grew at an average annual rate of 10.3 per cent between 1962 and 1972 and in 1971 Japan's G.N.P. became the second largest in the world, ranking behind only the U.S.A. (Soviet bloc countries excluded). In 1980 the growth rate of G.N.P. was 4.8 per cent, compared to 5.9 per cent in 1979. The 1979-85 Economic Plan envisaged an average annual growth rate of 5.5 per cent.

In 1976 the economy began to recover from the recessionary conditions of the preceding two years, and a great increase in the value of exports produced a very large trade surplus. The economy was hit by the oil crisis in 1979 and, after achieving massive trade surpluses in 1977 and 1978, a deficit of U.S. $13,451 million was recorded in 1979/80. In 1980/81, however, there were signs of recovery and the deficit narrowed to an estimated $5,860 million, with a rise in exports of 22.8 per cent and imports up by 19.5 per cent.

The economy grew by 3.8 per cent in 1980/81 and the outlook for 1981/82 was an estimated growth of 4.7 per cent in real terms. Industrial production rose by 4.6 per cent in 1980/81 and was expected to grow by 4.7 per cent in 1981/82. To help achieve these results, the Government adopted a series of measures to stimulate domestic demand, including increases in investment by electric power and gas companies, and increases in total imports and moderation of exports in order to reduce the current account surplus.

Since 1969 concessions have been granted for off-shore petroleum exploration in the Korean Straits, the Sea of Japan and off Hokkaido Island. Drilling began in 1971. The Japan National Oil Company (JNOC) was established in 1978.

Farming in Japan is labour-intensive, but the proportion of the work force employed in agriculture, forestry and fisheries fell from 19 per cent in 1970 to 10 per cent in 1980. Japan produces about 72 per cent of its total food requirements. The principal crops are rice, wheat, barley and potatoes. Japan is a leading fishing nation, both in coastal and deep-sea waters. However, since 1976 the fishing industry has been seriously affected by the establishment of exclusive fishing zones by many countries. The mining, construction and manufacturing industries employed 35 per cent of the labour force in 1980, compared with 44 per cent in 1970. Heavy and chemical industries predominate in the manufacturing sector, particularly petrochemicals, motor vehicles, steel, machinery, electrical equipment and chemicals. In 1980 Japan was the world's largest producer of ships and passenger cars and the second largest producer of synthetic fibres, cement, synthetic resins and steel.

Japan has been under pressure to revalue its currency in view of the favourable conditions of Japanese exports on the world market. The yen was revalued in December 1971 and floated in February 1973, and remained steady until 1977 when, until early 1979, it appreciated greatly against the U.S. dollar and other currencies. The impact of oil price rises abruptly reversed this trend, and during 1979 the yen fell by approximately 30 per cent against the U.S. dollar despite continued intervention by the Bank of Japan and a restrictive monetary policy, which included a 4 per cent increase in bank rate to 6.25 per cent. At the beginning of 1980 the yen depreciated against the U.S. dollar, reflecting an increase in Japan's current account deficit. However, monetary measures introduced to attract foreign investment allowed the yen to appreciate, a trend which did not, as expected, continue into 1981 when the yen failed to appreciate against the dollar, largely as a result of the high level of U.S. interest rates.

Transport and Communications

Despite difficulties of terrain, rail transport is highly developed, and a 54 kilometre-long tunnel linking Hokkaido and Honshu Islands is being built. The whole project, estimated to cost 385,000 million yen, is expected to be completed by April 1982. Japanese National Railways owned 21,322 km. of track in 1980. Work began in 1971 on a new super express railway network linking all the major cities. To be completed by the end of the century, it will total 7,000 km. in length. Japan's road network covered 1,113,387 km. in March 1980, and plans have been made to cover the country with a trunk automobile highway network of 7,600 km. Large and small craft ply between the islands and there is a big fleet of ocean-going vessels. The main ports are Yokohama, Nagasaki and Kobe. Japan Air Lines (JAL) is state-subsidized and there are about 40 other air transport companies. There are three international airports, at Tokyo, Osaka and Narita.

Social Welfare

Almost all of the population are insured under the various schemes covering health, welfare annuities, unemployment and industrial accidents. Workers normally retire at the age of 55, the average pension being about 40 per cent of salary.

Education

A kindergarten system provides education for children aged between three and five, although the majority of kindergartens are privately controlled. At the age of six children are required to attend elementary schools (shogakko), from which they proceed after six years to lower secondary schools (chugakko), for a further three years. Education is compulsory to the age of 15, and there are plans to increase the age limit to 18. Upper secondary schools provide a three-year course in general topics or a vocational course in areas such as agriculture, commerce, fine art and technical studies. Higher education is divided into three types of institution. Universities (daigaku) offer a four-year degree course, as well as post-graduate courses. Japan has over 400 universities, both public and private. Junior colleges (tanki-daigaku) provide less specialized two- to three-year courses. Both universities and junior colleges provide facilities for teacher-training. Technical colleges (tokushu-kyoiku-gakko) offer a five-year specialized training for technicians in many fields of engineering.

Tourism

The forests and mountains, pagodas and temples, traditional festivals and the classical Kabuki theatre are some of the many tourist attractions of Japan. In 1980 there were 1,316,632 foreign visitors to Japan.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Summary of the Constitution promulgated November 3rd, 1946, in force May 3rd, 1947).

The Emperor: Articles 1-8. The Emperor derives his position from the will of the people. In the performance of any State act as defined in the Constitution, he must seek the advice and approval of the Cabinet though he may delegate the exercise of his functions, which include: (i) the appointment of the Prime Minister and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; (ii) promulgation of laws, cabinet orders, treaties and constitutional amendments; (iii) the convocation of the Diet, dissolution of the House of Representatives and proclamation of elections to the Diet; (iv) the appointment and dismissal of Ministers of State and as well as the granting of amnesties, reprieves and pardons and the ratification of treaties, conventions or protocols; (v) the awarding of honours and performance of ceremonial functions.

Renunciation of War: Article 9. Japan renounces for ever the use of war as a means of settling international disputes.

Articles 10-40 refer to the legal and human rights of individuals guaranteed by the constitution.

The Diet: Articles 41-64. The Diet is convened once a year, is the highest organ of State power and has exclusive legislative authority. It comprises the House of Representatives (511 seats) and the House of Councillors (252 seats). The members of the former are elected for four years whilst those of the latter are elected for six years and election for half the members takes place every three years. If the House of Representatives is dissolved, a general election must take place within 40 days and the Diet must be convoked within 30 days of the date of the election. Extraordinary sessions of the Diet may be convened by the Cabinet when one quarter or more of the members of either House request it. Emergency sessions of the House of Councillors may also be held. A quorum of at least one third of the Diet members is needed to carry on Parliamentary business. Any decision arising therefrom must be passed by a majority vote of those present. A bill becomes law having passed both Houses except as provided by the constitution. If the House of Councillors either vetoes or fails to take action within 60 days upon a bill already passed by the House of Representatives, the bill becomes law when passed a second time by the House of Representatives, by at least a two-thirds majority of those members present.

The Budget must first be submitted to the House of Representatives. If, when it is approved by the House of Representatives, the House of Councillors votes against it or fails to take action on it within 30 days, or failing agreement being reached by a joint committee of both Houses, a decision of the House of Representatives shall be the decision of the Diet. The above procedure also applies in respect of the conclusion of treaties.

The Executive: Articles 65-75. Executive power is vested in the cabinet consisting of a Prime Minister and such other Ministers as may be appointed. The Cabinet is collectively responsible to the Diet. The Prime Minister is designated from among members of the Diet by a resolution thereof.

If the House of Representatives and the House of Councillors disagree on the designation of the Prime Minister, and if no agreement can be reached even through a joint committee of both Houses, provided for by law, or if the House of Councillors fails to make designation within 10 days, exclusive of the period of recess, after the House of Representatives has made designation, the decision of the House of Representatives shall be the decision of the Diet.

JAPAN

The Constitution, The Government

The Prime Minister appoints and may remove other Ministers, a majority of whom must be from the Diet. If the House of Representatives passes a no-confidence motion or rejects a confidence motion, the whole Cabinet resigns unless the House of Representatives is dissolved within 10 days. When there is a vacancy in the post of Prime Minister, or upon the first convocation of the Diet after a general election of members of the House of Representatives, the whole Cabinet resigns.

The Prime Minister submits bills, reports on national affairs and foreign relations to the Diet. He exercises control and supervision over various administrative branches of the Government. The Cabinet's primary functions (in addition to administrative ones) are to: (a) administer the law faithfully; (b) conduct State affairs; (c) conclude treaties subject to prior (or subsequent) Diet approval; (d) administer the civil service in accordance with law; (e) prepare and present the budget to the Diet; (f) enact Cabinet orders in order to make effective legal and constitutional provisions; (g) decide on amnesties, reprieves or pardons. All laws and Cabinet orders are signed by the competent Minister of State and countersigned by the Prime Minister. The Ministers of State, during their tenure of office, are not subject to legal action without the consent of the Prime Minister. However, the right to take that action is not impaired.

Articles 76-95. Relate to the Judiciary, Finance and Local Government.

Amendments: Article 96. Amendments to the Constitution are initiated by the Diet, through a concurring vote of two-thirds or more of all the members of each House and are submitted to the people for ratification, which requires the affirmative vote of a majority of all votes cast at a special referendum or at such election as the Diet may specify.

Amendments when so ratified must immediately be promulgated by the Emperor in the name of the people, as an integral part of the Constitution.

Articles 97-99 outline the Supreme Law, while Articles 100-103 consist of Supplementary Provisions.

POLITICAL PARTIES

The Political Funds Regulation Law provides that any organization which wishes to support a candidate for an elective public office must be registered as a political party. There are over 10,000 registered parties in the country, mostly of local or regional significance. The conservative Liberal-Democratic Party has the support of big business and the rural population and is also by far the richest of the political parties. The proportion of votes for the two socialist parties increased slowly at each election after 1952. The split between the two parties reflects a long-standing division between supporters of a mass popular party (now represented by the DSP) and those seeking a class party on Socialist lines. The Communist Party of Japan split in 1964, the official party being independent and supporting neither the U.S.S.R. nor the People's Republic of China.

Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP) (Jiyu-Minshuto): 7, 2-chome, Hirakawacho, Chiyoda-ku, Tokyo; f. 1955; programme includes the establishment of a welfare state, the build-up of industrial development, the levelling up of educational and cultural systems and the revision of the Constitution where necessary; follows a foreign policy of alignment with the U.S.A.; 1.5 million mems. JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The basic principles of the legal system are set forth in the Constitution, which lays down that the whole judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as are established by law, and enunciates the principle that no organ or agency of the Executive shall be given final judicial power. Judges are to be independent in the exercise of their conscience, and may not be removed except by public impeachment, unless judicially declared mentally or physically incompetent to perform official duties. The justices of the Supreme Court are appointed by the Cabinet, the sole exception being the Chief Justice, who is appointed by the Emperor after designation by the Cabinet.

The Court Organization Law, which came into force on May 3rd, 1947, decreed the constitution of the Supreme Court and the establishment of four types of inferior court—High, District, Family (established January 1st, 1949), and Summary Courts. The constitution and functions of the courts are as follows:

THE SUPREME COURT

This court is the highest legal authority in the land, and consists of a Chief Justice and fourteen associate justices. It has jurisdiction over the following matters:

- (1) Jokoku (appeals).
- (2) Kokoku (complaints), prescribed specially in codes of procedure.

It conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a Grand Bench or three Petty Benches. Both are collegiate bodies, the former consisting of all justices of the Court, and the latter of five justices. A Supreme Court Rule prescribes which cases are to be handled by the respective Benches. It is, however, laid down by law that the Petty Bench cannot make decisions as to the constitutionality of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or disposition, or as to cases in which an opinion concerning the interpretation and application of the Constitution or of any laws or ordinances is at variance with a previous decision of the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice: TAKAAKI HATTORI.

INFERIOR COURTS

High Court

A High Court conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a collegiate body, consisting of three judges, though for cases of insurrection the number of judges must be five. The Court has jurisdiction over the following matters:

- (1) Koso appeals from judgments in the first instance rendered by District Courts, from judgments rendered by Family Courts, and from judgments concerning criminal cases rendered by Summary Courts.
- (2) Kokoku complaints against rulings and orders rendered by District Courts and Family Courts, and against rulings and orders concerning criminal cases rendered by Summary Courts, except those coming within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.
- (3) Jokoku appeals from judgments in the second instance rendered by District Courts and from judgments rendered by Summary Courts, except those concerning criminal cases.
- (4) Actions in the first instance relating to cases of insurrection.

District Court

A District Court conducts hearings and renders decisions through a single judge or, for certain types of cases, through a collegiate body of three judges. It has jurisdiction over the following matters:

- (1) Actions in the first instance, except offences relating to insurrection, claims where the subject matter of the action does not exceed 300,000 yen, and offences liable to a fine or lesser penalty.
- (2) Koso appeals from judgments rendered by Summary Courts, except those concerning criminal cases.
- (3) Kokoku complaints against rulings and orders rendered by Summary Courts, except those coming within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and High Courts.

Family Court

A Family Court handles cases through a single judge in case of rendering judgments or decisions. However, in accordance with the provisions of other statutes it conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a collegiate body of three judges. A conciliation is effected through a collegiate body consisting of a judge and two or more members of the conciliation committee selected from among citizens.

It has jurisdiction over the following matters:

- (1) Judgment and conciliation with regard to cases relating to family as provided for by the Law for Adjudgment of Domestic Relations.
- (2) Judgment with regard to the matters of protection of juveniles as provided for by the Juvenile Law.
- (3) Actions in the first instance relating to adult criminal cases of violation of the Labour Standard Law, the Law for Prohibiting Liquors to Minors, or other laws especially enacted for protection of juveniles.

Summary Court

A Summary Court handles cases through a single judge, and has jurisdiction in the first instance over the following matters:

- (1) Claims where the value of the subject matter does not exceed 300,000 yen (excluding claims for cancellation or change of administrative dispositions).
- (2) Actions which relate to offences liable to fine or lesser penalty, offences liable to a fine as an optional penalty, and certain specified offences such as habitual gambling and larceny.

A Summary Court cannot impose imprisonment or a graver penalty. When it deems proper the imposition of a sentence of imprisonment or a graver penalty, it must transfer such cases to a District Court, but it can impose imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three years for certain specified offences.

A Procurator's Office, with its necessary number of procurators, is established for each of these courts. The procurators conduct searches, institute prosecutions and supervise the execution of judgments in criminal cases, and act as representatives of the public interests in civil cases of public concern.

RELIGION

The traditional religions in Japan are Shintoism and Buddhism. Neither is exclusive, and many Japanese subscribe at least nominally to both. Since the war a number of new religions based on an amalgamation of Shinto, Buddhist, Daoist, Confucian and Christian beliefs have grown up.

SHINTOISM

Shintoism is an indigenous cult of nature and ancestor worship. It is divided into two cults: national Shintoism, which is represented by the shrines; and sectarian Shintoism, which developed towards the end of the Tokugawa Shogunate. In 1868, Shinto was designated a national religion, and all Shinto shrines acquired the privileged status of a national institution. After the adoption of the present constitution in 1947, however, complete freedom of religion was introduced, and state support of Shinto was banned. There are an estimated 81,000 shrines, 101,000 priests and approximately 90,000,000 adherents.

BUDDHISM

World Buddhist Fellowship: Rev. RIRI NAKAYAMA, Hozenji Buddhist Temple, 1115, 3-chome, Akabanecho, Kita-ku, Tokyo.

CHRISTIANITY

In 1978 the number of Christians in Japan was estimated at 1,358,882. Twenty-two universities are maintained by Christian communities.

The following are the largest groups:

Roman Catholic Church: Archdiocese of Tokyo: Sekiguchi, 3-chome, 16-15, Bunkyo-ku, Tokyo 112; Archbishop of Tokyo Mgr. PETER SEIICHI SHIRAYANAGI; Archdiocese of Nagasaki: Catholic Center, 10-34 Uenomachi, Nagasaki; Archbishop of Nagasaki Cardinal JOSEPH A. SATOWAKI; Archdiocese of Osaka: 1-55, Nishinomiya-shi, Hyogo-ken; Archbishop of Osaka Mgr. PAUL HISAO YASUDA; 387,205 adherents (Dec. 1978).

United Church of Christ in Japan: Japan Christian Center, Room 31, 3-18 Nishi Waseda 2-chome, Shinjuku-ku, Tokyo 160; f. 1941; union of 34 Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, Reformed and other denominations; 189,741 mems. (March 1980); Moderator Rev. TOSHIO USHIROKU; Vice-Moderator Rev. YOICHI KISHIMOTO; Gen. Sec. Rev. JOHN M. NAKAJIMA.

Japanese Orthodox Church: Holy Resurrection Cathedral (Nicolai-Do), 1-3, 4-chome, Surugadai, Kanda, Chiyoda-ku, Tokyo 101; Primate H.E. Most Rev. THEODOSIUS, Archbishop of Tokyo and Metropolitan of All Japan; 24,783 adherents.

Nippon Sei Ko Kai (Holy Catholic Church in Japan): 4-21, Higashi 1-chome, Shibuya-ku, Tokyo 150; in Communion with the Church of England; est. as Province of the Anglican Communion 1887; 55,569 mems. (1980); Primate Rt. Rev. TITUS YOSHIO NAKAMICHI (Bishop of Kobe); 10 other diocesan bishops.

OTHER RELIGIONS

There are an estimated 5,000,000 adherents of other religions, with 1,200 shrines and temples and 15,000 priests.

THE "NEW RELIGIONS"

Many new cults have grown up in Japan since the end of World War II. Collectively these are known as the New Religions (Shinko Shukyo). The most important are as follows:

Soka Gakkai: 32 Shinano-machi, Shinjuku-ku, Tokyo; f. 1930; the lay society of Nichiren Shoshu (Orthodox Nichiren Buddhism); membership 7.8 million households (1979); Buddhist group aiming at individual happiness and world peace; Pres. EINOSUKE AKIYA.

Rissoh Kosei-kai: 2-11-1, Wada Suginami-ku, Tokyo 166; f. 1938; Buddhist laymen; Pres. Rev. NIKKYO NIWANO; 5 million mems. in Japan, the Republic of Korea, the U.S.A., Australia and Brazil (1981).

THE PRESS

The average circulation of Japanese dailies is the highest in the world after the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., and the circulation per head of population is highest at about 500 copies per thousand inhabitants. The two newspapers with the largest circulations are the Asahi Shimbun and Yomiuri Shimbun. Other influential papers include Mainichi Shimbun, Nihon Keizai Shimbun, Chunichi Shimbun and Sankei Shimbun. A notable feature of the Japanese press is the number of weekly news journals.

Technically the Japanese press is highly advanced, and the major newspapers are issued in simultaneous editions in the main centres.

FINANCE

BANKING

(cap. = capital; p.u. = paid up; dep. = deposits; m. = million; amounts in yen)

Japan's central bank and note-issuing body is the Bank of Japan, founded in 1882. More than half the credit business of the country is handled by 76 commercial banks (13 city banks and 63 regional banks), seven trust banks and three long-term credit banks, collectively designated "All Banks". The most important of these are the city banks, some of which have a distinguished history, reaching back to the days of the zaibatsu, the private entrepreneurial organizations on which Japan's capital wealth was built up before the Second World War. Although the zaibatsu were abolished as integral industrial and commercial enterprises during the Allied Occupation, the several businesses and industries which bear the former zaibatsu names, such as Mitsubishi, Mitsui and Sumitomo, continue to flourish and to give each other mutual assistance through their respective banks and trust corporations. Among the commercial banks, one, the Bank of Tokyo, specializes in foreign exchange business, while the Industrial Bank of Japan provides a large proportion of the finance for capital investment by industry. The Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan and Nippon Credit Bank Ltd. also specialize in industrial finance; the work of these three privately-owned banks is supplemented by the government-controlled Japan Development Bank.

The Government has established a number of other specialized organs to supply essential services not performed by the private banks. Thus the Japan Export-Import Bank advances credits for exports of heavy industrial products and imports of raw materials in bulk. A Housing Loan Corporation assists firms building housing for their employees, while the Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Finance Corporation gives loans to the named industries for equipment purchases. Similar services are provided for small businesses by the Small Business Finance Corporation.

An important part is played in the financial activity of the country by co-operatives, and by the many small enterprise institutions. Each prefecture has its own federation of co-operatives, with the Central Co-operative Bank of Agriculture and Forestry as the common central financial institution. This Central Co-operative Bank also serves as an agent for the Government's Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Finance Corporation.

There are also three types of private financial institutions for small business. The 71 Sogo Banks (Mutual Loan and Savings Banks) are now similar to commercial banks. There are 468 Credit Associations and 494 Credit Co-operatives, which loan only to members. The latter also receive deposits.

The commonest form of savings is through the government-operated Postal Savings System, which collects petty savings from the public by means of the post office network. Total deposits stood at 61,949,828 million yen in March 1981. The funds thus made available are used as loan funds by the Government financial institutions, through the Government's Trust Fund Bureau.

Clearing houses operate in each major city of Japan, and total 166 institutions. The largest are those of Tokyo and Osaka.

SUBWAYS AND MONORAILS

Subway service is available in Tokyo, Osaka, Kobe, Nagoya, Sapporo and Yokohama with a combined network of about 370 km. Most new subway lines are directly linked with existing J.N.R. or private railway terminals which connect the cities with suburban areas.

Japan started its first monorail system on a commercial scale in 1964 with straddle-type cars between central Tokyo and Tokyo International Airport, a distance of 13 km. In 1980 the total length of monorail was 27.5 km. Work started in 1971 on the 54-km. Seikan Tunnel (electric rail only) linking Honshu island with Hokkaido, and is scheduled to be completed in 1982.

ROADS

In March 1980 Japan's road network extended to 1,113,387 km. Plans have been made to cover the country with a trunk automobile highway network with a total length of 7,600 km., of which 3,500 km. are expected to be completed by 1982.

Expressways link Nagoya with Kobe, Tokyo and Gifu.

There is a national omnibus service, 58 publicly operated services and 301 privately operated services.

SHIPPING

Shipping in Japan is not nationalized but is supervised by the Ministry of Transport. On June 30th, 1980, the merchant fleet had a total displacement of 40,960,000 gross tons. The main ports are Yokohama, Nagoya and Kobe.

JORDAN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is an almost land-locked state in the Middle East. Israel separates it from the Mediterranean, while Syria lies to the north, Iraq to the east and Saudi Arabia to the south. The port of Aqaba in the far south gives Jordan a narrow outlet to the Red Sea. The climate is hot and dry. The average temperature is 15.5°C (60°F) but the winters can be cold. The official language is Arabic. Over 90 per cent of the population are Sunni Muslims and there are small communities of Christians and Shi'i Muslims. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is a horizontal tricolour of black, white and green, with a red triangle, containing a seven-pointed white star, at the hoist. The capital is Amman.

Recent History

Transjordan became independent in March 1946 with the ending of the British mandate, established by the League of Nations in 1922. The first ruler was the Amir Abdullah, proclaimed king in May 1946. When the British Government terminated its mandate in Palestine in May 1948, Jewish leaders proclaimed the State of Israel but Palestinian Arabs, supported by the armies of Arab states, opposed Israeli claims and hostilities continued until July. Transjordan's forces occupied about 3,900 sq. km. of Palestine, including East Jerusalem, and this was confirmed by the armistice with Israel in April 1949. In June 1949 the country was renamed Jordan and in April 1950 King Abdullah formally annexed the West Bank territory, which contained many Arab refugees from Israeli-held areas. Abdullah was assassinated in July 1951 and, after his son had abdicated, the crown passed in August 1952 to Hussein ibn Talal, then aged 16. King Hussein formally took power in May 1953. Jordan's treaty relationship with the United Kingdom was ended in March 1957.

The war with Israel in June 1967 left Israel in possession of all Jordanian territory on the west bank of the Jordan. The Old City of Jerusalem was incorporated into Israel; the rest of the conquered area has the status of an Israeli "administered territory". Many refugees are still housed in camps on the East Bank. Jordan used to be a base for several Palestine guerrilla organizations in their raids on the administered territories. The strength of these organizations frequently constituted a challenge to the Jordanian Government and, after a civil war lasting from September 1970 to July 1971, King Hussein expelled the guerrilla groups. Since then Hussein has resolutely refused to allow guerrilla activity from Jordan, although he has twice issued amnesties which released several hundred guerrilla prisoners, and by 1979 was on good terms with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

In March 1972 King Hussein presented a plan for a United Arab Kingdom in which a Palestinian region (capital Jerusalem) would be federated with the Jordanian region, whose capital, Amman, would be the federal capital. Israel, the PLO and Egypt reacted unfavourably, and Egypt broke off diplomatic relations, which were not restored until September 1973, when King Hussein became reconciled with President Sadat of Egypt and President Assad of Syria.

During the first part of 1974 King Hussein became increasingly estranged from other Arab States when it became clear that they considered the PLO as the legitimate representative of the Palestinians. At an Arab summit meeting in Rabat, Morocco, in October 1974, King Hussein had to accept the situation and support a unanimous resolution giving the PLO the right to establish an independent national authority on any piece of Palestinian land to be liberated.

During the late 1970s Jordan and Syria co-operated closely, but in late 1980 Saudi mediation was necessary to prevent military build-ups on both sides of the Jordanian-Syrian border from escalating into war. Syria supports Iran in the Gulf War and disapproves of Jordan's support for Iraq. Syria also believes that Jordan has been fostering treachery by the Muslim Brotherhood inside Syria, and is sympathetic to the Camp David alliance. Hussein had, in fact, condemned the Camp David agreements of September 1978, and his relationship with the PLO and the Arab World has been improving. Although relations with the U.S.A. are friendly, Hussein has asserted his independence by announcing in November 1981 that he would buy Soviet air defence equipment worth U.S. $200 million.

Government

Jordan is a constitutional monarchy. Legislative power is vested in a bicameral National Assembly. The Senate (House of Notables) has 30 members appointed by the King for eight years (half retiring every four years) and the House of Representatives (House of Deputies) has 60 members, including 50 Muslims and 10 Christians, elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution). In each House there is equal representation for the East Bank and the (occupied) West Bank. Executive power is vested in the King, who governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers, responsible to the Assembly. Constitutional amendments approved in 1974 gave the King powers to dissolve the Senate and postpone elections. The Assembly was dissolved in November 1974, although briefly reconvened in February 1976, when it approved a constitutional amendment giving the King power to postpone elections indefinitely and to convene the Assembly as required. In April 1978 a National Consultative Council was formed by Royal Decree, consisting of 60 members appointed by the King for two years.

There are eight administrative provinces, of which three have been occupied by Israel since June 1967.

Defence

The total strength of the Jordanian armed forces in July 1981 was 67,500. The army had 60,000 men, the air force 7,200 and the navy 300. There is a paramilitary force of 11,000 consisting of a Civil Militia of 7,500 and Mobile Police Force of 3,500. There is a two-year period of military service. The 1981 defence budget was 134 million dinars.

Economic Affairs

About three-quarters of the settled population are engaged in agriculture. Israeli occupation of the West Bank in 1967 resulted in a substantial loss of productive farming land. Principal crops are wheat, barley, lentils, citrus fruits, tomatoes and water-melons. The Jordan Valley Authority has made great progress in irrigation schemes in the Jordan valley.

Jordan is short of natural resources and has had to rely heavily on foreign aid, which in recent years has been coming increasingly from oil-rich Arab governments, Iran and Japan. Phosphates are the country's principal natural resource, and the Jordan Phosphate Mines have an expansion programme which was expected to increase production from 1.6 million tons in 1974 to 4.5 million tons in 1980. Production was about 2.25 million tons in 1978, about 3 million tons in 1979 and almost 4 million tons in 1980. Export earnings from phosphates exceeded JD 19 million in 1974, 1975 and 1976, enabling Jordan to rely less heavily on foreign aid. Although phosphate exports fell to JD 17.3 million in 1977, earnings from expatriates and the increased economic activity of Amman, because of disturbances in Beirut, have considerably benefited the economy. The increased use of Aqaba, because the Gulf War has closed Basra to the Iraqis, has had a similar beneficial effect. Phosphate earnings rose from JD 19.5 million in 1978 to almost JD 50 million in 1980. A U.S. $425 million potash project on the Dead Sea is under construction.

Transport and Communications

Jordan has a railway system but most traffic uses the excellent roads. Parts of the desert can be traversed safely by vehicles except after heavy rain. The port of Aqaba in the far south is Jordan's only outlet to the sea and civil aviation is of increasing importance.

Social Welfare

There is no comprehensive welfare scheme but the Government runs medical and health services and there is a large government medical complex in Amman. Government and private hospitals provided a ratio of one bed for 1,000 people in 1979. A new Social Security Law providing security for both employers and employees was put into effect in 1978 and extended in 1981. In June 1981 there were 732,615 refugees registered with UNRWA in east Jordan and a further 334,410 on the West Bank.

Education

Primary education is free and, where possible, compulsory. It starts at 6 to 8 years of age and lasts for six years. A further three-year period, known as the preparatory cycle, is also compulsory. UNRWA provides schooling for the Palestine refugees. In 1980/81 there were 2,698 primary and secondary schools, of which more than 2,000 were state-run. There are two universities, at Amman and Irbid.

Tourism

The ancient cities of Jerash and Petra, and Jordan's proximity to biblical sites, have encouraged tourism.

Public Holidays

FINANCE

1,000 fils = 1 Jordanian dinar (JD).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 20, 25, 50, 100 and 250 fils.

Notes: 500 fils; 1, 5, 10 and 20 dinars.

100 Jordanian dinars = £156.54 = $301.10.

Note: The Jordanian dinar was introduced in July 1950, with a value of £1 sterling, then equal to U.S. $2.80 ($1 = 357.14 fils). This valuation in terms of U.S. currency remained in effect until February 1973, so that from December 1971 (when the U.S. dollar was devalued) the dinar became equivalent to 2.579 Special Drawing Rights (SDRs). In February 1973, when the dollar was again devalued, the dinar's par value was fixed at $3.111 ($1 = 321.43 fils), thus maintaining the exchange rate in terms of SDRs. Until the end of 1973 the market rate against the U.S. dollar was allowed to fluctuate above and below this valuation. During the first six months of 1974 the par value and market rate were unified. Since July 1974, when the fixed relationship between the SDR and the U.S. dollar was ended, the exchange rate has been maintained at a mid-point of 1 dinar = 2.579 SDRs. The average market value of the dinar was $3.0549 in 1973; $3.1198 in 1974; $3.1305 in 1975; $3.0115 in 1976; $3.0373 in 1977; $3.2620 in 1978; $3.3270 in 1979; $3.3478 in 1980. The dinar was at par with the pound sterling until November 1967, after which the exchange rate was £1 = 857.14 fils (1 dinar = £1.167) until August 1971. The rate was £1 = 930.61 fils (1 dinar = £1.075) from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Revised Constitution approved by King Talal I on January 1st, 1952)

THE Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is an independent, indivisible sovereign state. Its official religion is Islam; its official language Arabic.

Rights of the Individual. There is to be no discrimination between Jordanians on account of race, religion or language. Work, education and equal opportunities shall be afforded to all as far as is possible. The freedom of the individual is guaranteed, as are his dwelling and property. No Jordanian shall be exiled. Labour shall be made compulsory only in a national emergency, or as a result of a conviction; conditions, hours worked and allowances are under the protection of the State.

The Press, and all opinions, are free, except under martial law. Societies can be formed, within the law. Schools may be established freely, but they must follow a recognized curriculum and educational policy. Elementary education is free and compulsory. All religions are tolerated. Every Jordanian is eligible to public office, and choices are to be made by merit only. Power belongs to the people.

The Legislative Power is vested in the National Assembly and the King. The National Assembly consists of two houses: the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Senate. The number of Senators is one-half of the number of members of the House of Representatives. Senators must be unrelated to the King, over 40, and are chosen from present and past Prime Ministers and Ministers, past Ambassadors or Ministers Plenipotentiary, past Presidents of the House of Representatives, past Presidents and members of the Court of Cassation and of the Civil and Sharia Courts of Appeal, retired officers of the rank of General and above, former members of the House of Representatives who have been elected twice to that House, etc. . . . They may not hold public office. Senators are appointed for four years. They may be re-appointed. The President of the Senate is appointed for two years.

The House of Representatives. The members of the House of Representatives are elected by secret ballot in a general direct election and retain their mandate for four years. General elections take place during the four months preceding the end of the term. The President of the House is elected by secret ballot each year by the Representatives. Representatives must be Jordanians of over 30, they must have a clean record, no active business interests, and are debarred from public office. Close relatives of the King are not eligible. If the House of Representatives is dissolved, the new House shall assemble in extraordinary session not more than four months after the date of dissolution. The new House cannot be dissolved for the same reason as the last. (Parliament was dissolved by Royal Decree in November 1974, and a National Consultative Council was formed in April 1978.)

General Provisions for the National Assembly. The King summons the National Assembly to its ordinary session on November 1st each year. This date can be postponed by the King for two months, or he can dissolve the Assembly before the end of its three months' session. Alternatively, he can extend the session up to a total period of six months. Each session is opened by a speech from the throne.

Decisions in the House of Representatives and the Senate are made by a majority vote. The quorum is two-thirds of the total number of members in each House. When the voting concerns the Constitution, or confidence in the Council of Ministers, "the votes shall be taken by calling the members by name in a loud voice". Sessions are public, though secret sessions can be held at the request of the Government or of five members. Complete freedom of speech, within the rules of either House, is allowed.

The Prime Minister places proposals before the House of Representatives; if accepted there, they are referred to the Senate and finally sent to the King for confirmation. If one house rejects a law while the other accepts it, a joint session of the House of Representatives and the Senate is called, and a decision made by a two-thirds majority. If the King withholds his approval from a law, he returns it to the Assembly within six months with the reasons for his dissent; a joint session of the Houses then makes a decision, and if the law is accepted by this decision it is promulgated. The Budget is submitted to the National Assembly one month before the beginning of the financial year.

The King. The throne of the Hashemite Kingdom devolves by male descent in the dynasty of King Abdullah

Ibn al Hussein. The King attains his majority on his eighteenth lunar year; if the throne is inherited by a minor, the powers of the King are exercised by a Regent or a Council of Regency. If the King, through illness or absence, cannot perform his duties, his powers are given to a Deputy, or to a Council of the Throne. This Deputy, or Council, may be appointed by Iradas (decrees) by the King, or, if he is incapable, by the Council of Ministers.

On his accession, the King takes the oath to respect and observe the provisions of the Constitution and to be loyal to the nation. As head of the State he is immune from all liability or responsibility. He approves laws and promulgates them. He declares war, concludes peace and signs treaties; treaties, however, must be approved by the National Assembly. The King is Commander-in-Chief of the Navy, the Army and the Air Force. He orders the holding of elections; convenes, inaugurates, adjourns and prorogues the House of Representatives. The Prime Minister is appointed by him, as are the President and members of the Senate. Military and civil ranks are also granted, or withdrawn, by the King. No death sentence is carried out until he has confirmed it.

Ministers. The Council of Ministers consists of the Prime Minister, President of the Council, and of his Ministers. Ministers are forbidden to become members of any company, to receive a salary from any company, or to participate in any financial act of trade. The Council of Ministers is entrusted with the conduct of all affairs of State, internal and external.

The Council of Ministers is responsible to the House of Representatives for matters of general policy. Ministers may speak in either House, and, if they are members of one House, they may also vote in that House. Votes of confidence in the Council are cast in the House of Representatives, and decided by a two-thirds majority. If a vote of "no confidence" is returned, the Ministers are bound to resign. Every newly-formed Council of Ministers must present its programme to the House of Representatives and ask for a vote of confidence. The House of Representatives can impeach Ministers, as it impeaches its own members.

Amendments. Two amendments were passed in November 1974 giving the King the right to dissolve the Senate or to take away membership from any of its members, and to postpone general elections for a period not to exceed a year, if there are circumstances in which the Council of Ministers feels that it is impossible to hold elections. A further amendment in February 1976 enabled the King to postpone elections indefinitely.

The Senate consists of 30 members, appointed by the King. A new Senate was appointed by the King on January 20th, 1979.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Elections to the 60-seat House of Representatives took place in April 1967. There were no political parties. The House was dissolved by Royal Decree on November 23rd, 1974, but reconvened briefly on February 15th, 1976. Elections have been postponed indefinitely.

In April 1978 a National Consultative Council was formed by Royal Decree. It consists of 60 members appointed by the King, and serves for two years. The second term began on April 21st, 1980. The King has the right to dissolve the Council or dismiss members. The President is AHMAD TARAWNAH.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Political parties were banned before the elections of July 1993. In September 1971 King Hussein announced the formation of a Jordanian National Union. This was the only political organization allowed. Communists, Marxists and "other advocates of imported ideologies" were ineligible for membership. In March 1972 the organization was renamed the Arab National Union. In April 1974 King Hussein dissolved the executive committee of the Arab National Union, and accepted the resignation of the Secretary-General and in February 1976 the Cabinet approved a law abolishing the Union. Membership was estimated at about 100,000.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

With the exception of matters of purely personal nature concerning members of non-Muslim communities, the law of Jordan was based on Islamic Law for both civil and criminal matters. During the days of the Ottoman Empire, certain aspects of Continental law, especially French commercial law and civil and criminal procedure, were introduced. Due to British occupation of Palestine and Transjordan from 1917 to 1948, the Palestine territory has adopted, either by statute or case law, much of the English common law. Since the annexation of the non-occupied part of Palestine and the formation of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, there has been a continuous effort to unify the law.

Court of Cassation. The Court of Cassation consists of seven judges, who sit in full panel for exceptionally important cases. In most appeals, however, only five members sit to hear the case. All cases involving amounts of more than JD 100 may be reviewed by this Court, as well as cases involving lesser amounts and cases which cannot be monetarily valued. However, for the latter types of cases, review is available only by leave of the Court of Appeal, or, upon refusal by the Court of Appeal, by leave of the President of the Court of Cassation. In addition to these functions as final and Supreme Court of Appeal, the Court of Cassation also sits as High Court of Justice to hear applications in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus and certiorari dealing with complaints of a citizen against abuse of governmental authority.

Courts of Appeal. There are two Courts of Appeal, each of which is composed of three judges, whether for hearing of appeals or for dealing with Magistrates Courts' judgments in chambers. Jurisdiction of the two Courts is geographical, with the Court for the Western Region sitting in Jerusalem (which has not sat since June 1967) and the Court for the Eastern Region sitting in Amman. The regions are separated by the River Jordan. Appellate review of the Courts of Appeal extends to judgments rendered in the Courts of First Instance, the Magistrates' Courts, and Religious Courts.

Courts of First Instance. The Courts of First Instance are courts of general jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal except those specifically allocated to the Magistrates' Courts. Three judges sit in all felony trials, while only two judges sit for misdemeanor and civil cases. Each of the seven Courts of First Instance also exercises appellate jurisdiction in cases involving judgments of less than JD 20 and fines of less than JD 10, rendered by the Magistrates' Courts.

Magistrates' Courts. There are fourteen Magistrates' Courts, which exercise jurisdiction in civil cases involving no more than JD 250 and in criminal cases involving maximum fines of JD 100 or maximum imprisonment of one year.

Religious Courts. There are two types of Religious Court: The Sharia Courts (Muslims); and the Ecclesiastical Courts (Eastern Orthodox, Greek Melkite, Roman Catholic and Protestant). Jurisdiction extends to personal (family) matters, such as marriage, divorce, alimony, inheritance, guardianship, wills, interdiction and, for the Muslim community, the constitution of Waqfs (Religious Endowments). When a dispute involves persons of different religious communities, the Civil Courts have jurisdiction in the matter unless the parties agree to submit to the jurisdiction of one or the other of the Religious Courts involved.

Each Sharia (Muslim) Court consists of one judge (Qadi), while most of the Ecclesiastical (Christian) Courts are normally composed of three judges, who are usually clerics. Sharia Courts apply the doctrines of Islamic Law, based on the Koran and the Hadith (Precepts of Muhammad), while the Ecclesiastical Courts base their law on various aspects of Canon Law. In the event of conflict between any two Religious Courts or between a Religious Court and a Civil Court, a Special Tribunal of three judges is appointed by the President of the Court of Cassation, to decide which court shall have jurisdiction. Upon the advice of experts on the law of the various communities, this Special Tribunal decides on the venue for the case at hand.

RAILWAYS

Hedjaz Jordan Railway (administered by the Ministry of Transport): P.O.B. 582, Amman; f. 1902; length of track 618 km.; Dir.-Gen. M. R. QOSEINI.

This was formerly a section of the Hedjaz railway (Damascus to Medina) for Muslim pilgrims to Medina and Mecca. It crosses the Syrian border and enters Jordanian territory south of Dera'a, and runs for approximately 366 km. to Naqb Ishtar, passing through Zarka, Amman, Qatrana and Ma'an. Some 844 km. of the line, from Ma'an to Medina in Saudi Arabia, have been abandoned for the past sixty years. Reconstruction of the Medina line, begun in 1965, was scheduled to be completed in 1971 at a cost of £15 million, divided equally between Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Syria. However, the reconstruction work has been suspended at the request of the Arab States concerned, pending further studies on costs. The line between Ma'an and Saudi Arabia (114 km.) is now completed, as well as 15 km. in Saudi Arabia as far as Haret Ammar Station. A new 115 km. extension to Aqaba was financed by a JD 12 million loan from the Federal Republic of Germany; this line became operational in October 1975. It is used mainly for transporting phosphates and connects Aqaba to Beirut. On January 27th, 1980, an agreement was signed between the Supreme Commission of the Hedjaz Railway and Dorsch Consult (Federal Republic of Germany) for a feasibility study for construction of the Hedjaz Railway to high international specifications to connect Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Syria. The feasibility study is awaiting a decision (September 1981).

ROADS

Ministry of Public Works: Amman.

Amman is linked by road with all parts of the kingdom and with neighbouring countries. All cities and most towns are connected by a 2-lane paved road system. In addition, several thousand km. of tracks make all villages accessible to motor transport. In 1981, the latest inventory showed the East Bank of Jordan to have 1,943 km. of main roads, 820 km. of secondary roads and 2,187 km. of village roads, all of which are asphalted. There are also 1,950 km. of unsurfaced roads.

SHIPPING

The port of Aqaba is Jordan's only outlet to the sea and has two general berths of 340 metres and 215 metres, with seven main transit sheds, covered storage area of 4,150 sq. metres, an open area of 50,600 sq metres and a phosphate berth 210 metres long and 10 metres deep. Ten new berths and storage facilities are being built, and a separate potash berth, a container terminal and a fertilizer jetty are planned.

Jordan National Line: Aqaba; f. 1979.

PIPELINES

Two oil pipelines cross Jordan. The former Iraq Petroleum Company pipeline, carrying petroleum from the oilfields in Iraq to Haifa, has not operated since 1967. The 1,717-km. (1,067-mile) pipeline, known as the Trans-Arabian Pipeline (Tapline) carries petroleum from the oilfields at Dhahran in Saudi Arabia to Sidon on the Mediterranean seaboard in Lebanon. It traverses Jordan for a distance of 177 km. (110 miles) and has frequently been cut by hostile action.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are international airports at Amman and Aqaba. Work is in progress on a new international airport, the Queen Alia International Airport, at Zizya.

Alia (The Royal Jordanian Airline): Head Office: P.O.B. 302, Arab Insurance Building, First Circle, Jabel Amman, Amman; f. 1963; government-owned; services to Middle East, Europe, Far East and U.S.A.; fleet of three Boeing 747-200, six Boeing 707-320C, six Boeing 727 200, one Boeing 720 B72, 2 Lockheed L-1011-500, one freighter Boeing 707 320C 70F; Chair. and Pres. KAMPUCHEA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Republic of Kampuchea, formerly Cambodia, occupies part of the Indochinese peninsula in South-East Asia. It is bounded by Thailand and Laos to the north, Viet-Nam to the east and by the Gulf of Thailand to the south. The climate is tropical. The heaviest rainfall occurs in September. The temperature ranges from 20° to 36°C (68° to 97°F), the average at Phnom-Penh being 27°C (81°F). The Khmer language is the official language spoken by all except the Vietnamese and Chinese minorities. The principal religion is Theravada Buddhism. The national flag is red with a five-towered temple in yellow in the centre. The capital is Phnom-Penh.

Recent History

Kampuchea, known as the Khmer Republic between 1970 and 1975, was formerly the Kingdom of Cambodia. It became a French protectorate in the 19th century and was incorporated in French Indochina. In April 1941 Norodom Sihanouk, then aged 18, succeeded his grandfather as King. In May 1947 he promulgated a constitution providing for a bicameral Parliament, including an elected National Assembly. Cambodia became an Associate State of the French Union in November 1949 and fully independent on November 9th, 1953. In order to become a political leader, King Sihanouk abdicated in March 1955 in favour of his father, Norodom Suramarit. Prince Sihanouk, as he became, founded a mass movement, the Sangkum Reastr Niyum (Popular Socialist Community), which won all the seats in Assembly elections in 1955, 1958, 1962 and 1966. King Suramarit died in April 1960 and Parliament elected Prince Sihanouk to become Head of State (without taking the title of King) in June 1960.

Prince Sihanouk's Government developed good relations with the People's Republic of China and North Viet-Nam, while being highly critical of the United States' role in Asia. From 1964, however, the Government was faced with a pro-Communist insurgency movement, the Khmer Rouge, which was joined in 1967 by left-wing elements from the Sangkum. Also, it became increasingly difficult to isolate Cambodia from the war in Viet-Nam.

In March 1970 a coup led by the Prime Minister, Lieut.-Gen. (later Marshal) Lon Nol, deposed Sihanouk. The new Government pledged itself to the removal of foreign Communist forces and appealed to the U.S.A. for military aid. Sihanouk went into exile and formed a Royal Government of National Union of Cambodia (GRUNC), supported by the Khmer Rouge. Sihanoukists and the Khmer Rouge formed the National United Front of Cambodia (FUNC). Their combined forces, aided by South Viet-Nam's National Liberation Front and North Vietnamese troops, posed a serious threat to the new regime but in October 1970 Marshal Lon Nol proclaimed the Khmer Republic. In June 1972 he was elected the first President. His regime, however, never controlled the whole country.

During 1973 an increasing number of foreign states recognized GRUNC as the rightful government of Cambodia. In 1974 the republican regime's control was limited to a few urban enclaves, besieged by GRUNC forces, mainly Khmer Rouge, to whom Phnom-Penh fell in April 1975. Prince Sihanouk became Head of State again but did not return from exile until September.

A new constitution, promulgated in January 1976, renamed the country Democratic Kampuchea, and established a republican form of government with a 250-member People's Representative Assembly. Elections for the Assembly were held in March 1976 and in April Prince Sihanouk resigned as Head of State and GRUNC was dissolved. The Assembly elected Khieu Samphan, formerly Deputy Prime Minister, to be President of the State Presidium (Head of State). The little-known Pol Pot became Prime Minister.

After 1975 close links with the People's Republic of China developed, while relations with Viet-Nam deteriorated markedly. In 1978 the Vietnamese army launched a series of attacks into Kampuchean territory. The Pol Pot Government accused Hanoi of trying to overthrow it and install a regime subservient to Viet-Nam in its place. In December the establishment of the Kampuchean National United Front for National Salvation (KNUFNS), a guerrilla movement opposed to Pol Pot and supported by Viet-Nam, was announced.

In January 1979 Phnom-Penh fell to Vietnamese forces, and the People's Republic of Kampuchea was proclaimed. A People's Revolutionary Council, with Heng Samrin, leader of the KNUFNS, as President, took control and pledged to restore freedom of movement, of association and of religion and to restore the family unit. Resistance to the new regime continued throughout 1979 and several groups opposing both the Khmer Rouge and the Heng Samrin regime were established, including the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), headed by a former Prime Minister, Son Sann.

Claiming that Pol Pot's regime had been responsible for 3 million deaths, in July 1979 the KNUFNS administration sentenced Pol Pot and his former Foreign Minister, Ieng Sary, to death in absentia. In January 1980 Khieu Samphan took over the premiership of the Khmer Rouge regime, while Pol Pot became Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces. Throughout 1980 Khmer Rouge soldiers were reported to be gaining ground, and continued to make guerrilla attacks on Government forces.

Throughout 1979 starvation and disease were prevalent. Relief agencies administered aid programmes, but were greatly hampered by international disputes. Relations between Thailand and Viet-Nam worsened when, in June 1980, Thailand announced a voluntary repatriation scheme for Khmer refugees in border camps, a move which was interpreted as returning Khmer Rouge soldiers to disrupt the Heng Samrin administration. A similar plan, suggested in June 1981, brought a threat from Viet-Nam that raids into Thai territory would be repeated if repatriation of refugees went ahead.

The involvement of Viet-Nam in the overthrow of the Pol Pot regime has been widely condemned, and in

KAMPUCHEA

Introductory Survey

October 1981, for the third consecutive year, the UN General Assembly voted to adopt a resolution calling for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Kampuchea. Only 30 countries have recognized the Government of Heng Samrin; the regime has made no further progress since gaining recognition from India in July 1980. At the September 1981 session of the UN General Assembly a large majority voted for continued recognition of the Khmer Rouge Democratic Kampuchean regime.

In November 1981 Son Sann, President of the KPNLF, dissociated himself from a united front administration being forged by three anti-Vietnamese factions. He would, however, continue to negotiate with the Khmer Rouge and Prince Sihanouk. In December the Khmer Rouge announced the dissolution of its Communist Party.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly, elected for five years by universal secret ballot. The Assembly elects the Council of State from among its members. Executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers, appointed by and responsible to the National Assembly. Local administration is carried out by Local People's Committees.

Defence

It was estimated that the guerrilla army of the Khmer Rouge numbered 30,000 men in July 1981. There are also some 21 divisions of Vietnamese troops in the country, numbering about 200,000 men.

Economic Affairs

The essentially agricultural economy was totally disrupted by the war between 1970 and 1975, and further affected by political events after December 1978. After April 1975 a vigorous agricultural programme was put into effect to overcome severe food shortages. The overcrowded urban areas were cleared of their inhabitants, who were driven into the countryside to work on the land and in other tasks of economic reconstruction. All sectors of the economy were nationalized and agriculture collectivized. The Pol Pot Government's chief aim was the production of as much rice, other strategic crops and livestock as possible. However, food shortages continued, and currency dealings largely ceased.

Under normal conditions, Kampuchea's main exportable commodities are rice, rubber and black pepper. Before 1970 rice was Kampuchea's principal export but by 1974 the country was a net importer of rice, although in 1976/77 there was a small exportable surplus of 150,000–200,000 tons. It is estimated that the area of rice under cultivation fell from 4 million hectares in 1970 to 700,000 hectares in 1974/75 and, after an increase in the area up to 1979, it fell again to 600,000 hectares in 1980. Progress towards food self-sufficiency was badly set back by a severe monsoon in 1981. Rubber production also fell, with 10,500 tons produced in 1979, half the 1976 level. However, Kampuchea has started to export rubber to the U.S.S.R.

FAO estimates indicate that the total production of most major crops (rice, maize, sweet potatoes, cassava, dry beans) rose slightly between 1975 and 1978, but fell in 1979. Since 1980 further famine has been avoided with the help of foreign aid, and significant progress has been made towards stemming famine and malnutrition. Despite this, food shortages remain a problem. The present Government plans to rebuild the buffalo and cattle herds and also the pig population.

The country's infrastructure and industry have been completely disrupted, but by December 1980 67 factories were reported to be back in production and an import-export enterprise had been established, to deal with both internal and external trade and foreign aid. Imports in 1977 were estimated at U.S. $22 million, and exports at $3 million.

Kampuchea has limited mineral resources, including phosphates, iron ore, gem stones, bauxite, silicon and manganese ore, of which only phosphates are at present being exploited. Forests are an important economic asset, as yet underexploited.

The KNUFNS administration aims to restore the national economy, primarily by reviving agricultural production. The establishment of a national bank was announced in November 1979 and money was reintroduced in March 1980.

Transport and Communications

Much of Kampuchea's transport and communications system was destroyed or disrupted during the years of conflict. By November 1979 the 260-km. Phnom-Penh-Kompong Som railway had been restored and work was also taking place on other lines. However, Kompong Som port was closed to foreign vessels in November 1980 after guerrilla attacks by the Khmer Rouge. There is an international airport near Phnom-Penh, operating flights to Ho Chi Minh City and Hanoi.

Social Welfare

Every district in Kampuchea has its own clinic of 30 to 50 beds and each province has its own hospital. During 1979–81 seven large hospitals were rebuilt in Phnom-Penh and in other provinces and three pharmaceutical factories were put back into operation.

Education

The KNUFNS regime is attempting to re-establish a full educational system. During the academic year 1979/80 there were about 1,300 primary schools, and over 12,000 teachers were recruited. In 1980/81 there were an estimated 1,328,033 primary school pupils. A commission has been set up to produce teaching materials, and there are plans to build more schools and universities. In 1980, 164 students were sent abroad for further education.

Coin: 5 sen.

Notes: 10, 20 and 50 sen; 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 riels.

Note: The riel was introduced in January 1955, replacing (at par) the Indochinese piastre. From May 1953 the piastre's value was 10 old French francs. The initial exchange rate was thus U.S. $1=35 riels (1 riel=2.857 U.S. cents). Except for exchange transactions in U.S. dollars and sterling, the riel was linked to French currency, with a value of 10 French centimes after the introduction of the new French franc in January 1960. In August 1969 the multiple exchange rate system ended when the riel was devalued (in line with the French franc) to 16 milligrammes of gold, worth 1.8004 U.S. cents ($1=55.542 riels) until August 1971. In October 1971 the official rate became inoperative except for specified official transfers and a flexible "floating" rate was established, initially at $1=140 riels. Thus the riel's link to the French franc was effectively broken and the currency devalued. The "floating" rate was later adjusted upwards, reaching $1=120 riels in January 1972, but thereafter the currency was frequently devalued. The exchange rate was $1=187 riels at the end of 1972; and $1=275 riels at the end of 1973. In September 1974 the currency was devalued by 65 per cent, with the exchange rate altered from $1=420 riels to $1=1,200 riels. By the end of 1974 the rate was $1=1,650 riels. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1=98 riels before November 1967; £1=84 riels from November 1967 to August 1969; and £1=133.30 riels from August 1969 to October 1971. Since April 1975 almost no information about the exchange rate has been available. However, a rate of $1=1,200 riels was quoted in 1977 and 1978 and it has also been reported that a floating exchange rate ($1=1,610 riels in 1977 and 1978) was available for foreign visitors. Domestically, the use of currency was abolished in 1975. Money was reintroduced in March 1980 and the exchange rate is reported to be approximately U.S. $1=4 new riels. The value of the new riel was 1 kg. of rice.

THE CONSTITUTION

In June 1981 a new constitution was approved by the National Assembly. It consists of a Preamble and ten chapters, divided into 93 Articles. A summary of the main points follows:

Political System: the People's Republic of Kampuchea is an independent sovereign state, gradually advancing towards socialism.

Economic System: the national economy is under the direction of the state, and comprises three sectors, the state-run, the collective and the family-run economy. Foreign trade is the monopoly of the state.

National Assembly: the supreme organ of state power and the sole legislative organ. Its deputies are elected by the principle of universal secret ballot and its term of office is five years. It has the power to adopt and revise the constitution and laws, to control their implementation, to adopt economic policies and the state budget, to elect or remove the Chairman, Vice-Chairman or Secretary from the National Assembly, the Council of State and the Council of Ministers, to control the activities of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers.

Council of State: the representative organ of the country and a standing organ of the National Assembly. Its members are elected from the National Assembly deputies. The Chairman of the Council of State is Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and Chairman of the National Defence Council, to be set up when necessary. Its duties include promulgating laws, deciding on the appointment or removal of members of the Council of Ministers, creating and abolishing ministries, ratifying or rejecting international treaties except when it is deemed necessary to refer them to the National Assembly.

Council of Ministers: the government and organ of direct management of society, responsible to the National Assembly.

Local People's Committees: the territory of Kampuchea is divided into provinces and municipalities, under the direct administration of central authority. People's committees are established in all provinces, municipalities, districts, communes and wards, and are responsible for local administration, public security and social order.

Judiciary and Courts: the judicial organs of Kampuchea are the people's courts and military tribunals.

KAMPUCHEA

Finance, Trade and Industry, Transport

FINANCE

The former government of Pol Pot abolished banks and withdrew all currency from circulation. The regime established in January 1979 announced the formation of a national bank in November. In March 1980 currency was reintroduced and the National Bank of Kampuchea announced the establishment of a Foreign Trade Bank to expand trade, provide international loans and assist in currency control.

National Bank of Kampuchea: Phnom-Penh; f. 1980; Chair. CHA RIENG.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

All means of production were nationalized after 1975, but no detailed information on the organization of trade and industry is available. By December 1980 some 67 factories had resumed activities and the following organizations were reported to be operating:

National Trade Commission: Pres. TANG SAROEM.

KAMPEXIM: Phnom-Penh; f. 1979; handles Kampuchea's imports and exports and the receipt of foreign aid.

TRADE UNION

Trade Unions for the Salvation of Kampuchea (TUSK): Phnom-Penh; Vice-Chair. HENG TEAV.

TRANSPORT

Railways: Moha Vithei Pracheathipattay, Phnom-Penh. Before April 1975 the total length of railway track was 1,370 km. Lines linked Phnom-Penh with the Thai border via Battambang and with Kompong-Som. A new line between Samrong Station and Kompong Speu was under construction in 1978. By November 1979 the 260-km. Phnom-Penh-Kompong Som line, and by February 1980 the Phnom-Penh-Battambang line, had been restored.

Roads: Before 1975 there were nearly 11,000 km. of motorable roads and tracks, of which about 2,000 km. were asphalted. In 1981 a newly-repaired section of the National Highway One, which runs from the Vietnamese border to Phnom-Penh, was formally opened.

Inland Waterways: The major routes are along the Mekong River, and up the Tonlé Sap River into the Tonlé Sap (Great Lake) covering in all about 1,400 km. The inland ports of Neak Luong, Kompong Cham and Prek Kdam have been supplied with motor ferries and the ferry crossings have been improved.

Shipping: The main port is Kompong-Som on the Gulf of Thailand, which can handle vessels up to 10,000 tons; the total number of berths was raised to 10 in 1970 at a cost of U.S. $50 million. Phnom-Penh port, currently undergoing reconstruction, lies some distance inland. Steamers of up to 4,000 tons can be accommodated.

Civil Aviation: There is an international airport at Pochentong, near Phnom-Penh. In September 1979 flights between Phnom-Penh, Ho Chi Minh City and Hanoi began, operated twice weekly by Vietnamese aircraft, and in March 1980 scheduled flights between Phnom-Penh and Vientiane began functioning.

KENYA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Kenya lies astride the equator on the east coast of Africa, with Somalia to the north-east, Ethiopia and Sudan to the north, Uganda to the west and Tanzania to the south. The climate varies with altitude: the coastal zone is hot and humid, temperatures averaging 20.5°–32°C (60°–90°F), while inland, above 1,500 metres (5,000 ft.), they average 7°–27°C (45°–80°F). The highlands and western areas receive ample rainfall but most of the northern part is very dry. Kiswahili is the official language; English, Kikuyu and Luo are also widely spoken. The majority of the African population follows traditional beliefs. Christians make up about 25 per cent of the population and Muslims 6 per cent. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of black, red and green, separated by two narrow white stripes. Superimposed is a red shield, with black and white markings, upon crossed white spears. The capital is Nairobi.

Recent History

A former British colony and protectorate, Kenya was given internal self-government in June 1963, became independent on December 12th, 1963, and a republic exactly one year later. Jomo Kenyatta led the nation following independence and as head of the Kenya African National Union (KANU), which alone stood at the 1969 and 1974 National Assembly elections, established stability in Kenya and won great personal prestige both at home and abroad. Kenyatta encouraged Western investment in Kenya and presided over the relatively smooth "Kenyanization" of jobs formerly held by Europeans and Asians and the redistribution to Africans of farms previously held by white settlers. During his presidency, political crises included the assassination in 1969 of Tom Mboya, the Minister for Economic Planning and Development and Secretary-General of KANU, which led to civil unrest and the banning of the opposition Kenya People's Union, and an unsuccessful revolutionary plot in 1971. Political discontent was heightened by the assassination in March 1975 of the outspoken politician J. M. Kariuki, and the later detention of unofficial opposition figures in the National Assembly. They were released, together with other political detainees, in December 1978. In September 1976 a proposal, backed by a number of Kikuyu politicians, to alter the constitution to debar the succession of the Vice-President, Daniel arap Moi, a member of the minority Kalenjin tribe, was thwarted by the Attorney-General, Charles Njonjo, backed by Kenyatta.

Following the death of President Kenyatta in August 1978, Moi was sworn in as acting President and proclaimed President in October, having received the constitutional requirement of endorsement from KANU, the only political party. Power passed smoothly to Moi, who was sole candidate in the presidential election of November 1979. Elections to the National Assembly were held concurrently and many long-standing members of the Government were defeated. A successful unity campaign during 1980 included the political rehabilitation of former Vice-President Oginga Odinga and the dissolution of many tribal associations. However, Odinga's attempt to be re-elected to the National Assembly in 1981 was barred by KANU. Government interference in the press increased after criticism of the Government's handling of Odinga and of a strike by doctors.

After having poor relations with most of its East African neighbours for some years, Kenya's position improved during 1981, encouraged by Moi's chairmanship of the OAU. The border with Tanzania has remained closed since shortly before the dissolution of the East African Community (EAC) in 1977, and was unlikely to reopen until the assets and liabilities of the EAC had been satisfactorily distributed. Improving relations with Uganda after the re-election of Milton Obote as President allowed negotiations to make great progress during 1981. Kenya has maintained friendly relations with Ethiopia, despite very different political beliefs, through common fear of Somalia's expansionist intentions. However, Kenya's relations with Somalia became more cordial during 1981, encouraged by the U.S.A., which has military bases in both countries, and agreement was reached on border security against raids by Somali shifita (bandits).

Government

Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, with 172 members (158 elected by universal adult suffrage, the Attorney-General and Speaker and 12 members nominated by the President) serving a term of five years, subject to dissolution. Executive power is held by the President, also directly elected for five years. He is assisted by an appointed Vice-President and Cabinet. Kenya has been a de facto one-party state since 1969.

Defence

Of a total armed force of 14,750 in July 1981, the army numbered 12,000, the navy 650 and the air force 2,100. Military service is voluntary. There is a paramilitary force of 1,800 police. Kenya receives military assistance from the United Kingdom, and from the U.S.A. in return for port and onshore facilities as part of its Rapid Deployment Force.

Economic Affairs

Kenya's prosperity rests largely on the production and processing of agricultural and pastoral products, and about 90 per cent of the population rely on agriculture for their livelihood. This sector accounted for 40 per cent of G.D.P. in 1977 and over 34 per cent in 1978. Farming is often adversely affected by climatic conditions and prolonged rains hit coffee production in 1978/79. The principal cash crops are coffee and tea (of which Kenya is Africa's leading producer), which together bring in about 60 per cent of foreign exchange earnings. Sisal, pyrethrum, pineapple and wattle are also produced. After a surplus in 1979, it was necessary to import 350,000 metric tons of maize in both 1979 and 1980, and there were also shortages of milk and wheat. Livestock farming varies from the traditional herding of the Masai tribes to the pedigree stock-raising of dairy and beef cattle on the Highland farms. Kenya is one of the few African countries with an important dairy industry. Since 1961 much of the land formerly used for European large-scale mixed farms has been transferred to Africans under a variety of settlement schemes, usually after extensive subdivision.

Manufacturing accounted for about 14 per cent of G.D.P. in 1979. Political stability and liberal investment policies have encouraged a high level of foreign investment which has not been deterred by measures intended to ensure a greater degree of Kenyan participation in industry by 1982. Kenya's economy has not suffered as much as had been expected after the collapse of the East African Community in 1977. However, trade with Kenya's partners in the Community, Tanzania and Uganda, has declined, and has been further hindered by political problems in Uganda and the closing of Kenya's border with Tanzania. However, in June 1979 Kenya agreed to re-establish air links with Tanzania and the terms of a new bilateral trade agreement were discussed.

The cost of crude petroleum imports was equal to 36 per cent of the total export earnings in 1980, or more than the earnings of Kenya's principal export commodity, coffee. Many ambitious hydroelectric and geothermal projects are under way in an attempt to make Kenya self-sufficient in electricity. A plant to refine power-alcohol from molasses was under construction at Kisumu in 1981. The most important mineral is soda ash and other minerals include salt, gold and limestone. Mineral production is relatively slight but is likely to increase considerably with the discovery of two million tons of lead and silver at Kinangoni, and the exploitation of a fluorspar ore deposit in the Kerio valley. A major geological survey is under way.

The high rate of economic growth achieved in the decade after independence, which produced a 27 per cent increase in per capita G.D.P. and a 50 per cent rise in smallholders' farm production, has not been maintained. In 1979 a fourth development plan, for 1979-83, was launched with a target annual G.D.P. growth rate of 6.3 per cent and estimated total expenditure of K£4,000 million. In 1980 the target was lowered to 5.4 per cent, but even this is unlikely to be met. After reaching 7.8 per cent in 1977, the G.D.P. growth rate fell to 5.7 per cent in 1978, 4.1 per cent in 1979 and 2.4 per cent in 1980. The G.D.P. figures reflect the importance of coffee and tea to the Kenyan economy, which have suffered adverse production conditions and prices since the boom of 1977. Problems of unemployment, exacerbated by an annual rate of population increase of about 4 per cent, a high inflation rate (13 per cent in 1980) and unequal distribution of wealth remain unsolved. The fear that Somalia will pursue its territorial claims in northern Kenya has also led to greatly increased defence spending, accounting for 15 per cent of the budget in 1979/80. Increases in the price of crude petroleum have added to Kenya's worsening balance of payments, which fell from a surplus of K£112 million in 1977 to a deficit of K£333 million in 1980. Since 1979 increasingly strict import controls have been introduced in an attempt to reduce the balance of payments deficit, but this results in lower G.D.P. growth.

Transport and Communications

There are international airports at Nairobi and Mombasa. Main roads link the big towns and there is a country-wide bus service. A main road linking Nairobi and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was completed in 1977 and a project to build another from Kitale to Juba in Sudan is under way. Mombasa is a fully-equipped international seaport which has 16 deep-water berths and is being further extended at a cost of 715 million Ks. It serves Uganda and Ethiopia as well as Kenya.

Social Welfare

There are State pension and welfare schemes and a National Social Security Fund has been set up. The Government runs hospitals and medical services; no fees are charged to out-patients. Free attention is given in case of need. Missions, private charities and commercial firms provide further facilities. A National Council of Social Services co-ordinates the work of voluntary agencies. In 1978 Kenya had 225 hospitals and 201 health centres, with a total of 24,780 hospital beds. Major rural health improvements include the construction of numerous health centres but the family planning programme launched in 1974 has been of very limited success.

Education

Education is not compulsory. The Government provides or assists in the provision of schools and the number of primary school pupils increased from 900,000 in 1963 to about 4.2 million in 1981. In January 1980 remaining fees were abolished and the goal of free primary education was reached. Free milk is provided for pupils. Secondary education is much less widely available. Education is multi-racial at all levels but is hampered by a lack of qualified teachers. There are also considerable inequalities: in 1977, 72 per cent of school-age children in Nairobi attended school, compared with only 4 per cent in North-East Province. In 1976 adult literacy averaged 66 per cent for males and 31 per cent for females. In December 1978 President Moi launched a compulsory programme with 1983 as the deadline for total literacy. The University of Nairobi, which has over 5,000 students, has frequently been closed because of student unrest and many students study overseas.

Tourism

Kenya's attractions as a tourist centre are mainly its wildlife, Indian Ocean coast and good all-year-round climate. There are 15 National Parks and 23 game reserves open to the public, several of which provide overnight accommodation. The hunting of game was banned in 1977 to prevent further destruction of Kenya's natural heritage.

Tourism in Kenya has recently enjoyed unprecedented expansion and was the country's third largest foreign exchange earner in 1980. Several hotels and game lodges are being expanded or are under construction and more overseas tourist offices have been opened. In 1980 there were 362,621 visitors to Kenya and receipts totalled K£82 million. However, the industry has suffered from the closure of the Tanzanian border in February 1977 and the severance of air traffic between the two countries the following November.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Kenya shilling (Ks.).

Coins: 5, 10 and 50 cents; 1 Ks.

Notes: 5, 10, 20 and 100 Ks.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 19.688 Ks.; U.S. $1 = 10.235 Ks.;

100 Ks. = £5.08 = $9.77.

Note: The Kenya shilling was introduced in September 1966, replacing (at par) the East African shilling, equal to one shilling sterling (£1 = 20 shillings). From September 1949 the shilling was equivalent to 14 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 7.143 shillings) and this valuation remained in force until June 1973. When the U.S. dollar was devalued in December 1971 the rate of Kenya shillings per IMF Special Drawing Right (SDR) was fixed at 7.755. In February 1973 the dollar was again devalued and the exchange rate became 1 SDR = 8.617 shillings. In June 1973 Kenya's currency was revalued by 3.5 per cent, with a new exchange rate of $1 = 6.90 shillings (1 SDR = 8.324 shillings), but in January 1974 the shilling was restored to its earlier valuation of 14 U.S. cents ($1 = 7.143 shillings). From July 1974 the fixed relationship between the SDR and the U.S. dollar was ended but the Kenya shilling remained tied to U.S. currency. This remained in force until October 1975, when the link between the shilling and the U.S. dollar was ended and the shilling's value fixed at a mid-point of 9.66 per SDR, then equal to 8.16 per dollar, an effective devaluation of 12.5 per cent. The average exchange rate (shillings per U.S. dollar) was: 7.343 in 1975; 8.367 in 1976; 8.277 in 1977; 7.729 in 1978; 7.475 in 1979; 7.420 in 1980. The shilling was twice devalued in 1981: to 10.15 per SDR in February and to 11.95 per SDR in September. In terms of sterling, the value of the Kenya shilling between November 1967 and August 1971 was 1s. 2d. (5.83p), the exchange rate being £1 = 17.14 Ks.; from December 1971 to June 1972 the rate was £1 = 18.61 Ks. In this survey the symbol "K£" is used to denote amounts of 20 Ks., equivalent to £1.02 sterling in December 1981.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Independence Constitution for Kenya came into force in June 1963 with the introduction of full internal self-government. On December 12th, 1964, Kenya became a Republic within the Commonwealth. The present Constitution (a summary of its main provisions follows) was introduced in 1969 when previous amendments to the 1963 constitution were consolidated by the Constitution of Kenya Act. There have been subsequent amendments.

The Republic of Kenya is a de facto one-party state governed by a united central government. The central legislative authority is the National Assembly, consisting of a single house. There are 158 elected Representatives, 12 members nominated by the President and two ex officio members, the Attorney-General and the Speaker. Each candidate for an elected seat must be nominated by a political party. The maximum life of the National Assembly is five years from its first meeting (except in wartime). It can be dissolved by the President at any time and the National Assembly may force its own dissolution by a vote of "no-confidence", whereupon Presidential and Assembly elections have to be held within 90 days.

Executive power is in the hands of the President, Vice-President and Cabinet. Both the Vice-President and the Cabinet are appointed by the President, who must be a member of the Assembly and at least 35 years of age.

Election of the President is by direct popular vote and only one Presidential nominee is permitted from each party. If a President dies, or a vacancy otherwise occurs during a President's period of office, the Vice-President becomes interim President for up to 90 days while a successor is elected.

The Constitution can be amended by the affirmative vote on Second and Third Reading of 65 per cent of the membership of the National Assembly (excluding the Speaker and Attorney-General). Constitutional amendments can be passed in a single day provided there are separate sittings of the National Assembly.

Under the terms of the Constitution, individual rights and liberties are protected, including freedom of expression and assembly, privacy of the home, the right not to be detained without cause, and the right of compensation for the compulsory purchase of property.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Kenya Court of Appeal: P.O.B. 30187, Nairobi. It is the final court of appeal for Kenya in civil and criminal matters and holds sessions at Nairobi, Mombasa, Kisumu and Nyeri.

The Judges of Appeal are:

Chief Justice: The Hon. Sir JAMES WICKS.

Justices of Appeal: The Hon. Mr. Justice C. B. MADAN, The Hon. Mr. Justice K. D. POTTER, The Hon. Sir ERIC LAW, The Hon. Mr. Justice E. H. E. MILLER.

Registrar: P. S. BRAR.

Deputy Registrar: ALVEL SINGH.

The High Court of Kenya: Nairobi; has unlimited criminal and civil jurisdiction at first instance, and sits as a court of appeal from subordinate courts in both criminal and civil cases. The High Court is a court of admiralty.

There is a resident Puisne Judge at Mombasa, Nakuru and Kisumu. Regular sessions in Kisii, Nyeri and Meru.

SUBORDINATE COURTS

Resident Magistrates' Courts: have country-wide jurisdiction, with powers of punishment by imprisonment up to five years or by fine up to K₵500. If presided over by a chief magistrate or senior resident magistrate the court is empowered to pass any sentence authorized by law.

District Magistrates' Courts: of First, Second and Third Class; these have jurisdiction within Districts and powers of punishment by imprisonment for up to five years, one year and six months respectively, or by fines of up to K₵500, K₵100 and K₵50 respectively.

Kadhi's Courts: have jurisdiction within Districts, to determine questions of Muslim law.

RELIGION

African religions, beliefs and forms of worship show great variety both between races and tribes and from one district to another. The Arab community is Muslim, the Indians are partly Muslim and partly Hindu, and the Europeans and Goans are almost entirely Christian.

Muslims are found mainly along the coastline but the Muslim faith has also established itself among Africans around Nairobi and other towns up-country and among some tribes of the Northern districts.

Christian missions are active and about 25 per cent of Africans are Christian. East Africa is also an important centre for the Bahá'í faith.

KIRIBATI

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Kiribati comprises 33 atolls, in three principal groups, scattered within an area of about 5 million square km. (2 million square miles) in the mid-Pacific Ocean. The country extends about 3,870 km. (2,400 miles) from east to west and about 2,050 km. (1,275 miles) from north to south. Its nearest neighbours are Nauru, to the west, and Tuvalu and Tokelau, to the south. The climate is equatorial or tropical, with daytime temperatures varying between 26°C (79°F) and 32°C (90°F). There is a season of north-westerly trade winds from March to October and a season of rains and gales from October to March. Average annual rainfall, however, varies greatly from 3,000 mm. (118 inches) in the northern islands to 1,500 mm. (59 inches) at Tarawa and 700 mm. (28 inches) in the Line Islands. Droughts occur in the central and southern islands. The principal languages are I-Kiribati (Gilbertese) and English, and the population is mainly Christian. The flag depicts a frigate bird in flight, on a red background, above a rising sun and alternating wavy lines of blue and white, representing the sea. The capital is on Tarawa Atoll.

Recent History

In 1892 the United Kingdom established a protectorate over the 16 atolls of the Gilbert Islands and the nine Ellice Islands (now Tuvalu). The two groups were administered together by the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), which was based in Fiji until its removal to the British Solomon Islands (now Solomon Islands) in 1953. The phosphate-rich Ocean Island (now Banaba), west of the Gilberts, was annexed by the United Kingdom in 1900. The Gilbert and Ellice Islands were annexed in 1915, effective from January 1916, when the protectorate became a colony. Later in 1916 the new Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony (GEIC) was extended to include Ocean Island and two of the Line Islands, far to the east. Christmas Island (now Kiritimati), another of the Line Islands, was added in 1919 and the eight Phoenix Islands (then uninhabited) in 1937. The Line and Phoenix Islands, south of Hawaii, were also claimed by the U.S.A. A joint British-U.S. administration for two of the Phoenix group, Canton (now Kanton) and Enderbury, was agreed in April 1939.

During the Second World War the GEIC was invaded by Japanese forces, who occupied the Gilbert Islands in 1942-43. Tarawa Atoll was the scene of some of the fiercest fighting in the Pacific between Japan and the U.S.A.

To prepare the GEIC for self-government, an Advisory Council and an Executive Council were established in 1963. In 1967 a House of Representatives was formed, with 23 elected members and up to seven others. The Executive Council was replaced by a Governing Council, with up to 10 members, including five chosen by the elected members of the House. In 1970 these two bodies were in turn replaced by a Legislative Council (33 members, including 28 elected) and an Executive Council (10 members, including a Leader of Government Business elected by the Legislative Council). In January 1972 a Governor of the GEIC was appointed to assume almost all the functions previously exercised in the colony by the High Commissioner. At the same time the five uninhabited Central and Southern Line Islands, previously administered directly by the High Commissioner, became part of the GEIC. In May 1974 the Legislative Council was replaced by a House of Assembly, with 28 elected members and three official members. A Chief Minister, Naboua Ratieta, was elected by the House and chose between four and six other Ministers.

On October 1st, 1975, the Ellice Islands were allowed to break away from the GEIC to form a separate territory, named Tuvalu. The remainder of the GEIC was renamed the Gilbert Islands and the House of Assembly's membership was reduced.

In 1975 the British Government refused to recognize as legitimate an independence move by the people of Ocean Island (Banaba) who had been in litigation with the British Government since 1971 over revenues derived from exports of phosphate. Open-cast mining so adversely affected the island's environment that the Banabans had been resettled on Rabi Island, 2,600 km. away in the Fiji group. The Banabans rejected the British Government's argument that phosphate revenues should be spread over the whole territory of the Gilbert Islands. In 1976 the British High Court in London dismissed the Banabans' claim for unpaid royalties but upheld that for damages. In May 1977 the British Government offered an ex gratia payment of $A10 million without admitting liability for damages and on condition that no further appeal would be made to the courts. The offer was not accepted. The Banaban emissary to London, the Rev. Tebuke Rotan, was unsuccessful in pressing the case for the constitutional separation of the island.

In November 1977 the Rabi Council of Leaders met with Gilbertese ministers at Bairiki, Tarawa, and drew up 11 "Bairiki Resolutions". It was proposed that, prior to the forthcoming constitutional conference to decide the question of the independence of the Gilbert Islands, a referendum would be held to determine the status of Banaba. The British Government agreed to abide by the results of the proposed referendum, but refused to increase the offer of compensation made to the Banabans in May 1977. It was reported in April 1978 that the Banabans had agreed to accept the judgment of the British High Court made in 1976, having been warned by legal advisers that they would be unlikely to win if they appealed against the judgment. However, the Banabans continued to press their claim for compensation and independence.

The Gilbert Islands obtained internal self-government on January 1st, 1977. Later in 1977 the number of elected members in the House of Assembly was increased to 36. This was subsequently adjusted to 35, with the remaining seat to be filled by a nominee of the Rabi Council of Leaders. Following a general election in February 1978, Ieremia Tabai, Leader of the Opposition in the previous House, was elected Chief Minister in March. In December 1978 the Banabans were represented at a conference on the independence of the Gilbert Islands but, when the conference decided that Banaba should remain within the Gilbert Islands after independence, the Banaban delegation walked out. On July 12th, 1979, the Gilbert Islands became an independent republic, within the Commonwealth, under the name of Kiribati. Ieremia Tabai became the country's first President. In September Kiribati signed a treaty of friendship with the U.S.A., which relinquished its claim to the Line and Phoenix Islands, including Kanton and Enderbury. In April 1981 the Banaban community on Rabi accepted the British Government's earlier ex gratia offer of $A10 million in compensation together with the interest accrued, although they continued to seek self-government.

Government

Kiribati is a republic. Legislative power is vested in the Maneaba ni Maungatabu, a unicameral body. It has 35 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), one nominated representative of the Banaban community and, if he is not an elected member, the Attorney-General as an ex officio member. The Head of State is the Beretitenti (President), who is also Head of Government. The pre-independence Chief Minister became the first President but in future the President is to be elected by direct popular vote. The President governs with the assistance of a Vice-President and Cabinet, whom he appoints from among members of the Maneaba. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet, which is responsible to the Maneaba.

Economic Affairs

Phosphate rock, derived from rich deposits of guano, ceased to be mined on Banaba by the British Phosphate Commissioners in 1979, when supplies were exhausted. Apart from Banaba, Kiribati is composed of coral atolls with poor quality soil. Most of them are covered with coconut palms, which provide the only agricultural export in the form of copra. A government-owned company operates a coconut plantation on Kiritimati and there are commercial plantations on two other atolls in the Line Islands. Most islanders are fully engaged in subsistence activities. Bananas, pandanus, breadfruit and pawpaw are grown as food crops. Fishing is an important local activity and considerable hopes are placed on the development of marine resources, particularly skipjack tuna fishing around the Phoenix Islands.

The islands rely heavily on foreign aid and at the constitutional conference in London in December 1978 the British Government agreed to provide special budgetary assistance until 1982 and to re-examine the level of assistance after that date.

Transport and Communications

Transport between the atolls is very difficult because of the enormous area over which they are scattered. There are wharves at Kanton and Tarawa and ports of entry at Banaba, Tabuaeran (Fanning) and Kiritimati. A government boat calls at each atoll once a month. International flights operate through Tarawa and there are ten other small airfields.

Social Welfare

The Government maintains a free medical service. Each atoll has a dispensary, with a medical assistant in charge, and there is a hospital with 100 beds on Banaba. The Central Hospital, with 153 beds, is on Tarawa.

Education

Every atoll is provided with at least one primary school, and an estimated 92 per cent of children of primary school age attend these. In 1980 there were 100 primary schools of which 95 were operated by the Government and five were private institutions. There are two government secondary schools and three maintained by the church missions. Four community high schools were opened in 1977. The Government also maintains a teacher training college, a technical institute and a marine training school, which trains about 200 seamen each year for employment by overseas shipping companies.

In 1980 enrolment figures were 13,234 in primary schools and 957 in secondary schools. The total number of teachers in all establishments was 602. Kiribati participates in the University of the South Pacific, based in Fiji.

Tourism

There is very little tourism, owing to the islands' remoteness, although there are two hotels.

Public Holidays

1982: July 12th (Independence Day), August 4th (Youth Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Currency and Exchange Rates

Australian currency: 100 cents = 1 dollar ($A).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = $A1.6895;

U.S. $1 = 87.8 Australian cents.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Area: Land area: 711 sq. km.

Population (census results): 51,929 at December 8th, 1973; 56,213 at December 12th, 1978.

Capital: Tarawa (population 20,148 at 1978 census).

Employment (1978): Government service and private enterprise 6,005, phosphate mining in Banaba and Republic of Nauru and other employment outside Kiribati 988.

Agriculture (1980—FAO estimate): Copra 9,000 metric tons.

Livestock (1980—FAO estimates): 10,000 pigs, 166,000 chickens.

Sea Fishing (catch in metric tons): 18,850 in 1980.

Finance: Australian currency: 100 cents = 1 Australian dollar ($A). Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents. Notes: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 dollars. Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = $A1.6895; U.S. $1 = 87.8 Australian cents; $A100 = £59.19 = U.S. $113.93.

Note: The Australian dollar was introduced in February 1966, replacing the Australian pound (exchange rate: £A1=U.S. $2.24 from September 1949) at the rate of $A2=£A1. From February 1966 to August 1971 the exchange rate remained at $A1=U.S. $1.12 (U.S. $1=89.29 Australian cents). Between December 1971 and December 1972 the par value of the Australian dollar was U.S. $1.216 (U.S. $1=82.24 Australian cents), though the effective mid-point exchange rate was $A1=U.S. $1.191. Revaluations were made in December 1972 ($A1=U.S. $1.275), in February 1973 ($A1.4167) and in September 1973 ($A1=U.S. $1.4875). This last valuation remained in effect until September 1974, when the direct relationship with the U.S. dollar was ended and the Australian dollar was linked to a weighted "basket" of the currencies of Australia's main trading partners. The Australian dollar's value immediately fell to U.S. $1.31, representing an effective devaluation by 11.9 per cent. The currency maintained its weighted value until November 1976, when it was devalued by 17.5 per cent. Between December 1976 and February 1977 it was revalued by a small margin on several occasions. The average value of the Australian dollar was: U.S. $1.134 in 1971; U.S. $1.192 in 1972; U.S. $1.423 in 1973; U.S. $1.441 in 1974; U.S. $1.310 in 1975; U.S. $1.225 in 1976; U.S. $1.109 in 1977; U.S. $1.145 in 1978; U.S. $1.118 in 1979. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1=$A2.143 ($A1=9s. 4d. or 46.67p) from November 1967 to December 1971; and £1=$A2.188 from December 1971 to June 1972.

Budget (1980): revenue $A15,701,280; expenditure $A13,282,788; Development Programme $A3,310,963; Reserve Fund $A71,958,016.

Consumer Price Index (Base 1975=100): Jan.-March 1981: Food 173.2 Clothing 167.0, Housing and Household 252.9, General Index 174.9.

External Trade (1979): Imports $A15,545,434 (30.2 per cent food); Exports $A21,208,859 (24.7 per cent phosphate, 14.5 per cent copra).

Trade is mainly with Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, Papua New Guinea and Fiji.

Transport: Roads: There are about 640 km. suitable for motor vehicles. Shipping: The Government and the Kiribati Shipping Corporation maintain a fleet of six passenger/freight vessels for administrative business. During 1977 69 overseas vessels called at the islands.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution was promulgated at independence on July 12th, 1979. The main provisions are set out below.

The Constitution states that Kiribati is a sovereign democratic Republic and that the Constitution is the supreme law. It guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The President, known as the Beretitenti, is Head of State and Head of the Government and presides over the Cabinet which consists of the Beretitenti, the Kauoman-ni-Beretitenti (Vice-President), the Attorney-General and not more than eight other ministers appointed by the Beretitenti from an elected parliament known as the Maneaba ni Maungatabu. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet which is directly responsible to the Maneaba ni Maungatabu. The Constitution also provides for a Council of State consisting of the Chairman of the Public Services Commission, the Chief Justice and the Speaker.

Legislative power resides with the single-chamber Maneaba ni Maungatabu, composed of 35 members elected for four years, one nominated member (see below) and the Attorney-General as an ex officio member if he is not elected. The Maneaba is presided over by a Speaker, who is elected by the Maneaba from among persons who are not members of the Maneaba. The 35 elected members of the pre-independence House of Assembly took office as members of the first Maneaba.

One chapter makes special provision for Banaba and the Banabans, stating that one seat in the Maneaba is reserved for a nominated member of the Banaban community. The Banabans' inalienable right to enter and reside in Banaba is guaranteed and, where any right over or interest in land there has been acquired by the Republic of Kiribati or by the Crown before independence, the Republic is required to hand back the land on completion of phosphate extraction. A Banaba Island Council is provided for and also the establishment of an independent Commission of Inquiry three years after Independence Day to review the provisions relating to Banaba.

The Constitution also makes provision for finance, for a Public Service and for an independent judiciary (see Judicial System).

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

President (Beretitenti): IEREMIA T. TABAI, C.M.G. (took office July 12th, 1979).

Vice-President (Kauoman-ni-Beretitenti): TEATAO TEANNAKI.

THE CABINET

President and Minister of Foreign Affairs: IEREMIA T. TABAI, C.M.G.

Vice-President and Minister of Home Affairs: TEATAO TEANNAKI.

Minister of Health and Community Affairs: ABETE MERANG.

Minister of Works and Communications: BABERA KIRATA, O.B.E.

Minister of Finance: TIWAU AWIRA.

Minister of Natural Resource Development: RONITI TEIWAKI.

Minister of Education, Training and Culture: IEREMIA TATA.

Minister of the Line and Phoenix Groups: TEWE AROBATI.

LEGISLATURE

MANEABA NI MAUNGATABU

(HC) High Commission.

Australia: P.O.B. 77, Bairiki, Tarawa (HC); High Commissioner: K. J. McMAHON (acting).New Zealand: Suva, Fiji (HC).United Kingdom: P.O.B. 61, Bairiki, Tarawa (HC); High Commissioner: D. H. G. ROSE.

Kiribati also has diplomatic relations with Belgium, Canada, Chile, the People's Republic of China, Fiji, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Republic of Korea, the Netherlands, Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands and the U.S.A.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The High Court of Kiribati is a superior court of record and consists of the Chief Justice and other judges as may be prescribed, appointed by the Beretitenti. The High Court has jurisdiction to supervise any civil or criminal proceedings before any subordinate court and appeals from it lie with the Court of Appeal for Kiribati. This, also, is a court of record and consists of the Chief Justice and the other judges of the High Court and other qualified persons appointed by the Beretitenti.

Chief Justice: J. R. JONES, C.B.E.RELIGION

Anglican, Methodist, Roman Catholic, Seventh-Day Adventist, Baha'i and Church of God communities are represented.

Roman Catholic: P.O.B. 79, Bairiki, Tarawa; Bishop of Tarawa, Nauru and Funafuti, Most Rev. PAUL MEA KAIENA.Protestant: P.O.B. 80, Bairiki, Tarawa; f. 1968; Moderator Pastor ROBUTI RIMON.THE PRESS*Te Itoi ni Kiribati: P.O.B. 79, Tarawa; f. 1914; Roman Catholic Church newsletter; monthly; circ. 1,650.Te Kaotan te Ota: f. 1915; Protestant Churches newspaper; monthly.Te Uekera: Broadcasting and Publications Authority, Tarawa; English and I-Kiribati (Gilbertese); weekly.RADIO*Radio Kiribati: P.O.B. 78, Bairiki, Tarawa; f. 1954; statutory body; station T3K1 broadcasting on one MW transmitter; programmes in I-Kiribati and English; Man. In 1978 there were 7,636 radio receivers.

FINANCEBANKING*Bank of New South Wales (Australia): Bairiki, Tarawa; f. 1970 (incorporating the Government Savings Bank).TRADE AND INDUSTRY*CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES

Co-operative societies dominate trading in Tarawa and have an almost complete monopoly outside the capital, except for Banaba and Kiritimati. In June 1981 there were 34 co-operative societies.

The Kiribati Copra Co-operative Society Ltd.: Betio, Tarawa; f. 1976; the sole exporter of copra; nine committee mems.; 21 member Co-operative Societies; Chair. IAONEABA IOBI; Sec. BINATAAKE TAWAIA.TRADE UNION*The Kiribati General Workers' Federation: P.O.B. 40, Bairiki, Tarawa; f. 1979 after federation of three former unions; membership open to all employees, unestablished government employees as well as local contractors; 2,700 mems.; Pres. AWIU TAARAM; Gen. Sec. ETERA TEANGANA.TRANSPORT*ROADS

Wherever practicable, roads are built on all atolls and connecting causeways between islets are also being built as funds and labour permit.

SHIPPING

United Kingdom cargo ships call at Tarawa every four months. Ships call at Tarawa to collect copra every two or three months, and at Kiritimati, Tabuaeran (Fanning) and Teraina (Washington) twice a year. There is an irregular service from Tarawa to Suva, Fiji, by Government vessels. Ships owned by the Karlander Line operate a container service from New Zealand and Australia to Kiribati via New Caledonia and Solomon Islands; Pacific Forum line vessels call at Tarawa, and tankers bring fuel from Fiji and occasionally from Nouméa in New Caledonia.

Kiribati Shipping Corporation: Tarawa; maintains, with the Government, a fleet of six passenger/freight vessels for administrative business.CIVIL AVIATION

There are 18 airfields in Kiribati.

Air Tungaru Corporation: P.O.B. 274, Bikenibeu, Tarawa; f. 1977; national airline; operates scheduled passenger services between Tarawa's Bonriki Airport and Abaiang, Abemama, Aranuka, Arorae, Beru, Butaritari, Maiana, Makin, Marakei, Nikunau, Nonouti, Onotoa, North Tabiteuea, South Tabiteuea and Tamana; also flies to Funafuti, Honolulu and Papeete; fleet of 2 Trislander, 1 Riley Heron, 1 Boeing 727-100C; Chief Exec. I. S. WATSON.

Kiribati is also served by Air Nauru.

THE DEMOCRATIC PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF KOREA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea occupies the northern part of the Korean peninsula, bordered to the north by the People's Republic of China and to the south by the Republic of Korea. The climate is continental, with cold, dry winters and hot, humid summers; temperatures range from -6° to 25°C (21° – 77°F). The language is Korean. Buddhism, Confucianism, Daoism, Shamanism and Chundo Kyo are the chief religions. The national flag (proportions 65 by 33) is red with blue stripes on the upper and lower edges, each separated from the red by a narrow white stripe. Left of centre is a white disc containing a five-pointed red star. The capital is Pyongyang.

Recent History

Korea was formerly an independent kingdom. It was occupied by Japanese forces in 1905 and formally annexed by Japan in 1910, when the King was deposed. Following Japan's surrender in August 1945, ending the Second World War, Korea was divided at the 38th parallel into military occupation zones, with Soviet forces in the North and U.S. forces in the South. In the North a Provisional People's Committee, led by Kim Il Sung of the Korean Communist Party (KCP), was established in February 1946 and given government status by the Soviet occupation forces. In July 1946 the KCP merged with another group to form the North Korean Workers' Party. In 1947 a Supreme People's Assembly was established and Kim Il Sung became Premier. A new Assembly was elected in August 1948 and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (D.P.R.K.) was proclaimed on September 9th. Initially the D.P.R.K. was recognized only by the U.S.S.R. and other communist countries. Soviet forces withdrew from North Korea in December 1948. By a merger between communists in the North and South, the Korean Workers' Party (KWP) was formed in June 1949.

Korea remained partitioned into two republics, each claiming to have legitimate jurisdiction over all Korea. The Korean War began when North Korean forces invaded the South in June 1950. The UN mounted a collective defence action in support of South Korea and the invasion was repelled. North Korean forces were supported by the People's Republic of China from October 1950. Peace talks began in July 1951 and an armistice agreement was made in July 1953. The ceasefire line, roughly following the 38th parallel, remains the frontier between North and South Korea, with a demilitarized zone, supervised by UN forces, separating the two countries.

In 1971 talks took place for the first time between the Red Cross Societies of both North and South Korea. In 1972 both parties affirmed that reunification should be achieved through peaceful means. Reunification talks were, however, suspended in 1973, and hopes for better relations were undermined by a series of clashes between North and South Korean vessels in disputed waters during 1974. Propaganda campaigns, suspended by agreement in 1972, were resumed by both sides and minor border incidents have continued. In October 1978 the UN command accused North Korea of threatening the 1953 truce, after the discovery of an underground tunnel (the third since 1974) beneath the demilitarized zone. The abduction of South Korean fishing vessels by the North Korean navy and the discovery of underground pro-North organizations and spy rings in the South between 1979 and 1981 worsened the situation. Attempts were made to resume political talks but meetings between representatives of the two Governments in March 1980 were inconclusive. The rise of Kim Il Sung's son, who advocates a hard line against the South, did not improve the situation and in January 1981 North Korea rejected a proposal made by President Chun of South Korea that he visit North Korea and Kim Il Sung visit the South.

North Korea has achieved considerable success in increasing its international recognition; in 1970 only 36 nations recognized the government in Pyongyang, but by 1981 diplomatic relations with over 90 states had been established. A motion, supported by North Korea, demanding the withdrawal of UN forces from South Korea was only narrowly defeated in the United Nations in 1974. North Korean prestige was further enhanced with its entry to the Conference of Non-Aligned Nations at Lima, Peru, in August 1975, but in 1976 several North Korean diplomats were expelled for drug trafficking and abuse of diplomatic privileges, causing embarrassment to the regime in Pyongyang.

A new constitution adopted in December 1972, created the office of President and Kim Il Sung was elected to the post. The Sixth Congress of the KWP was held in October 1980. The appointment of Kim Jong Il, Kim Il Sung's son, to the newly-established Standing Committee of the Politburo and to several other key positions within the Party appeared to confirm him as his father's choice of successor.

Government

Under the 1972 Constitution, the highest organ of state power is the unicameral Supreme People's Assembly, with 579 members elected (unopposed) for four years by universal adult suffrage. The Assembly elects for its duration the President of the Republic and, on the latter's recommendation, other members of the Central People's Committee to direct the Government. The Assembly appoints the Premier and the Committee appoints other Ministers to form the Administration Council, led by the President.

Political power is held by the communist Korean Workers' Party (KWP), which dominates the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland (including two other minor parties). The Front presents an approved list of candidates for elections to representative bodies. The KWP's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects a Central Committee to supervise Party work. The Committee elects the Politburo to direct policy.

North Korea comprises nine provinces and two cities, each with an elected People's Assembly.

Defence

Defence treaties have been signed with the U.S.S.R. and the People's Republic of China. Military service is selective: army 5 years, navy 5 years, and air force 3/4 years. The total strength of the armed forces in July 1981 was estimated at 782,000 men: the army comprised 700,000 men, the air force 51,000, and the navy 31,000. Security and border troops number 38,000. Defence expenditure in 1981 was estimated at 3,010 million won.

Economic Affairs

With the establishment of the Democratic People's Republic, all industry was nationalized and land distributed among the peasants. In September 1975 it was announced that virtually all the targets of the Six-Year Plan (1971-76) had been achieved 16 months ahead of schedule. At the end of 1977, after a year of readjustment, a Seven-Year Plan was announced for 1978-84. Its aim is to increase industrial output by 12.1 per cent annually (compared with the 16.3 per cent target for the previous Plan) and includes increasing production of electricity, coal, steel, grain and non-ferrous metals.

Although about half the working population are still employed on the land, a rapid increase in industrial output occurred in the 1970s. The country is rich in mineral wealth, with large deposits of coal, iron, lead, copper, zinc, tin, silver and gold and North Korea accounts for 5-7 per cent of world tungsten. Industrial development has concentrated on heavy industry (metallurgy, electricity, machine-building, cement and chemicals) and expansion has been marked in the steel and mining industries. Crude steel production reportedly exceeded 5 million metric tons in 1978, and the target for 1984 is 8 million metric tons. Production of iron ore is estimated at over 9 million tons (metal content 40 per cent) annually. Coal output was claimed to be over 50 million tons in 1976. Light industry has also benefited from large-scale automation. Modernization and re-equipment of the textile industry resulted in an estimated production of 600 million metres of fabrics in 1976. Industry relies mainly on hydroelectric power, for which North Korea has a large potential, and has not been unduly affected by increasing oil prices. North Korea has, however, found itself lagging behind in industrial techniques and is turning increasingly towards the West for sophisticated machinery and technology. In 1981 it was reported that tentative approaches had been made to several West European companies about setting up joint ventures in North Korea.

Rapid mechanization of agriculture has meant that North Korea, which formerly had to import food, now has an exportable surplus. In 1979 it was claimed that the grain harvest reached 9 million tons. Current irrigation schemes have included the construction of 39,723 kilometres of canals. In 1981 plans were announced for a huge land reclamation project to create 3,000 sq. km. of new farmland from tidal flats along the west coast and effectively to increase the total land area by about 2.5 per cent. Preliminary work had reportedly begun on an 8 km.-long dam across the lower part of the Daidong river.

The World Bank has estimated that North Korean G.N.P. totalled U.S. $17,040 million in 1978 (per caput G.N.P. $1,000). Between 1970 and 1978 the average annual increase in per caput G.N.P. is estimated to have been 3.8 per cent. In 1975 there was a trade deficit of about $362 million. Since 1973 North Korea has become involved in increasingly serious difficulties with its balance of payments, and has defaulted on the repayment of several foreign loans. In 1979 it was estimated that the principal debtors were the U.S.S.R. ($700 million), Japan ($400 million), the Federal Republic of Germany ($150 million) and Italy ($26 million). Other major trading partners are Czechoslovakia, Poland and the German Democratic Republic. In 1979 imports totalled U.S. $496 million while exports totalled $485 million, showing a distinct improvement.

Transport and Communications

The road and rail network was almost completely destroyed during the Korean War. Electrification of the new railway system is proceeding rapidly and there are direct rail links with Moscow and Beijing. Roads have been rebuilt to take the increasing traffic but have a low priority to avoid over-dependence on imported fuel. There are regular passenger and freight services along the Aproz, Daidong and Ryesung rivers, but little air traffic exists. International air services connect Pyongyang to Beijing and Moscow.

Social Welfare

The state provides rest homes, sanatoria and free medical services. In December 1979 there were 2 doctors and 12 hospital beds per thousand of the population.

Education

Free and compulsory 11-year education in state schools was introduced in 1975. Children enter kindergarten at the age of four, and primary school at the age of six. After four years, they advance to senior middle school for six years. In 1980 there were 10,000 primary and senior middle schools. There is one university, with more than 16,000 students, and about 170 other higher educational institutions. English is compulsory as a second language at the age of 14.

Tourism

Tourism has yet to be developed although the country has great potential. Mount Keumgang and Songdown are beauty spots. A non-commercial exchange rate of U.S. $1 = 2.128 won is available for tourists.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (May Day), August 15th (Anniversary of Liberation), September 9th (Independence Day), October 10th (Anniversary of the Foundation of the Workers' Party of Korea), December 27th (Anniversary of the Constitution).

1983: January 1st (New Year), April 15th (Kim II Sung's birthday).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 chon (jun) = 1 won.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 1.912 won;

U.S. $1 = 99.4 chon.

FINANCE

100 chon (jun) = 1 won.

Coins: 1, 5 and 10 chon.

Notes: 50 chon; 1, 5, 10, 50 and 100 won.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 1.912 won (basic rate) or 4.093 won (non-commercial rate),

U.S. $1 = 99.4 chon (basic rate) or 2.128 won (non-commercial rate).

100 won = £52.29 = $100.58 (basic rates).

Note: The new won, equal to 100 old won, was introduced in February 1959. From 1958 the basic exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 120 old won. The initial basic rate of $1 = 1.20 new won (1 won = 83.33 U.S. cents) remained in force until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the basic rate was $1 = 1.105 won (1 won = 90.48 U.S. cents). In terms of sterling, the basic rate was £1 = 2.88 won from November 1967 to June 1972. In January 1961 a commercial exchange rate was established for foreign trade transactions. This was fixed at £1 = 6.16 won, equal to $1 = 2.20 won until November 1967. The commercial rate, tied to sterling, was $1 = 2.567 won from November 1967 to August 1971; and $1 = 2.364 won from December 1971 to June 1972. The commercial rate was abolished in June 1972, when sterling was "floated". Since February 1973 the non-commercial rate has been $1 = 2.128 won. The basic rate is linked to the Soviet rouble at a parity of 1 rouble = 1.34 won.

THE CONSTITUTION

(adopted December 27th, 1972)

The following is a summary of the main provisions of the Constitution.

Articles 1-6: The Democratic People's Republic is an independent socialist State (Art. 1); the revolutionary traditions of the State are stressed (its ideological basis being the Juche idea of the Workers' Party of Korea) as is the desire to achieve national reunification by peaceful means on the basis of national independence.

Articles 7-10: National sovereignty rests with the working people who exercise power through the Supreme People's Assembly and People's Assemblies at lower levels, which are elected by universal, secret and direct suffrage.

Articles 11-17: Defence is emphasized as well as the rights of overseas nationals, the principles of friendly relations between nations based on equality, mutual respect and non-interference, proletarian internationalism, support for national liberation struggles and due observance of law.

Articles 18-48: Culture and education provide the working people with knowledge to advance a socialist way of life. Education is free and there are universal and compulsory one-year pre-school and ten-year senior middle school programmes in being.

Articles 49-72: The basic rights and duties of citizens are laid down and guaranteed. These include the right to vote (for those over the age of 17), to work (the working day being eight hours), to free medical care and material assistance for the old, infirm or disabled, to political asylum. National defence is the supreme duty of citizens.

Articles 73-88: The Supreme People's Assembly is the highest organ of State power, exercises exclusive legislative authority and is elected by direct, equal, universal and secret ballot for a term of four years. Its chief functions are: (i) to adopt or amend legal or constitutional enactments; (ii) to determine State policy; (iii) to elect the President, Vice-President, Secretary and members of the Central People's Committee (on the President's recommendation); (iv) to elect members of the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly, the Premier of the Administration Council (on the President's recommendation), the President of the Central Court and other legal officials; (v) to approve the State Plan and Budget; (vi) to decide on matters of war and peace. It holds regular and extraordinary sessions, the former being twice a year, the latter as necessary at the request of at least one-third of the deputies. Legislative enactments are adopted when approved by more than half of those deputies present. The Standing Committee is the permanent body of the Supreme People's Assembly. It examines and decides on bills; amends legislation in force when the Supreme People's Assembly is not in session; interprets the law; organizes and conducts the election of Deputies and judicial personnel.

Articles 89-99: The President as Head of State is elected for four years by the Supreme People's Assembly. He convenes and presides over Administrative Council meetings, is the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and chairman of the National Defence Commission. The President promulgates laws of the Supreme People's Assembly and decisions of the Central People's Committee and of the Standing Committee. He has the right to issue orders, to grant pardons, to ratify or abrogate treaties and to receive foreign envoys. The President is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly.

Articles 100-106: The Central People's Committee comprises the President, Vice-President, Secretary and Members. The Committee exercises the following chief functions: (a) to direct the work of the Administration Council as well as organs at local level; (b) to implement the constitution and legislative enactments; (c) to establish and abolish Ministries, appoint Vice-Premiers and other members of the Administration Council; (d) to appoint and recall ambassadors and defence personnel; (e) to confer titles, decorations, diplomatic appointments; (f) to grant general amnesties, make administrative changes; (g) to declare a state of war. It is assisted by a number of Commissions dealing with Internal Policy, Foreign Policy, National Defence, Justice and Security and other matters as may be established. The Central People's Committee is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly's Standing Committee.

Articles 107-114: The Administration Council is the administrative and executive body of the Supreme People's Assembly. It comprises the Premier, Vice-Premiers and such other Ministers as may be appointed. Its major functions are the following: (i) to direct the work of Ministries and other organs responsible to it; (ii) to work out the State Plan and take measures to make it effective; (iii) to compile the State Budget and to give effect to it; (iv) to organize and execute the work of all sectors of the economy as well as transport, education and social welfare; (v) to conclude treaties; (vi) to develop the armed forces and maintain public security; (vii) to annul decisions and directives of State administrative departments which run counter to those of the Administration Council. The Administration Council is responsible to the President, Central People's Committee and the Supreme People's Assembly.

Articles 115-132: The People's Assemblies of the province (or municipality directly under central authority), city (or district) and county are local organs of power. The People's Assemblies or Committees exercise local budgetary functions, elect local administrative and judicial personnel and carry out the decisions at local level of higher executive and administrative organs.

Articles 133-146: Justice is administered by the Central Court—the highest judicial organ of the State, the local Court, the People's Court and the Special Court. Judges and other legal officials are elected by the Supreme People's Assembly. The Central Court protects State property, Constitutional rights, guarantees that all State bodies and citizens observe State laws and executes judgements. Justice is administered by the court comprising one judge and two people's assessors. The Court is independent and judicially impartial. Judicial affairs are conducted by the Central Procurator's Office which exposes and institutes criminal proceedings against accused persons. The Office of the Central Procurator is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly, the President, and the Central People's Committee.

Articles 147-149: These articles describe the national emblem, the national flag and designate Pyongyang as the capital.

THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Korea forms the southern part of the Korean peninsula between North China and Japan. To the north, separated by a frontier which roughly follows the 38th parallel, is the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The climate is marked by cold, dry winters with an average temperature of -6°C (21°F) and hot, humid summers with an average temperature of 25°C (77°F). The language is Korean. Mahayana Buddhism is the principal religion, with about 13 million adherents. Christians number over 8 million, of whom about 84 per cent are Protestant. Other religions include Confucianism, Daoism and Chundo Kyo, a religion peculiar to Korea, combining elements of Shaman, Buddhist and Christian doctrines. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) consists of a disc divided horizontally by an S-shaped line, red above and blue below, on a white field with parallel black bars (broken and unbroken) in each corner. The capital is Seoul.

Recent History

(For more details of history of Korea up to 1953, including the Korean War, see Democratic People's Republic of Korea, p. 727.)

UN-supervised elections for a National Assembly were held in May 1948. The Assembly adopted a democratic constitution and South Korea became the independent Republic of Korea in August 1948, with Dr. Syngman Rhee, the Liberal Party leader, as first President.

President Rhee was forced to resign in April 1960. Elections in July were won by the Democratic Party, led by Chang Myon, but his government was deposed in May 1961 by a military coup, led by Gen. Park Chung-Hee. Power was assumed by a Supreme Council for National Reconstruction (SCNR). In January 1963 the military leadership formed the Democratic Republican Party (DRP). Gen. Park became President of the Third Republic in December.

Opposition to President Park's regime led to the imposition of martial law in October 1972. A constitution for the Fourth Republic, giving the President greatly increased powers, was approved by national referendum in November. A new body, the National Conference for Unification (NCU), was elected in December. The NCU re-elected President Park for a six-year term and the DRP obtained a decisive majority in elections for the new National Assembly. In May 1975 opposition to the Government was effectively banned, and political trials followed. Elections for the NCU were held in May 1978, and the President was re-elected for a further six-year term in July. In October 1979 serious rioting erupted when the leader of the opposition New Democratic Party (NDP) was accused of subversive activities and expelled from the National Assembly. On October 26th President Park was assassinated in an alleged coup attempt by Kim Chae-Gyu, Chief of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency (KCIA), and six other presidential aides. Martial law was imposed and the Prime Minister, Choi Kyu-Hah, was elected President by the NCU in December. Instability in the DRP and the army resulted in a military coup on December 12th, led by the head of the Defence Security Command, Lt.-Gen. Chun Doo-Hwan, who effectively took power.

Although President Choi promised liberalizing reforms, in May 1980 demonstrations by students and confrontation with the army led to the arrest of about 30 political leaders, including Kim Dae-Jung, former head of the NDP. The National Assembly was closed and all political activity banned. Nevertheless, students and dissidents in the southern city of Kwangchu took over the city, which was recaptured only after troops had stormed it. The State Council resigned and a new Council, headed by Acting Prime Minister Park Choong-Hoon, emerged. The Special Committee for National Security Measures (SCNSM) was formed, with Gen. Chun as Chairman of its Standing Committee. In August President Choi resigned and Gen. Chun was elected President. Acting Prime Minister Nam Duck-Woo formed a new State Council in September. Kim Dae-Jung was sentenced to death for plotting rebellion (commuted to life imprisonment in January 1981), provoking strong international protest. In October a new Constitution was approved overwhelmingly by referendum. The SCNSM was reorganized to form the 81-member Legislative Council for National Security.

Martial law was lifted in January 1981, new political parties were formed and a new electoral college was created. In February President Chun was elected to remain in office and in March, with his inauguration, the Fifth Republic emerged. A new Cabinet was formed and a Ministry of Labour created. In March elections were held for 276 members of the new National Assembly, and President Chun's Democratic Justice Party became the majority party with 151 seats. With the establishment of the new National Assembly, the Legislative Council for National Security was dissolved and in April the KCIA was renamed the Agency for National Security. In January 1982 Yoo Chang-Sun took over from Nam Duck-Woo as Prime Minister, and five other ministers were replaced.

South Korea has not been admitted to the United Nations and relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continue to be strained. Various incidents, including the discovery of several underground pro-North Korean spy rings and increased anti-South Korea agitation in the North, have all worsened the situation. In January 1981 President Chun's proposal that he should visit North Korea and Kim Il-Sung visit the South was flatly rejected by Pyongyang.

Relations between South Korea and the U.S.A. were frequently strained during the Carter Administration, in particular by the proposal to withdraw U.S. ground troops from South Korea, which was abandoned in 1979, and by the trial of Kim Dae-Jung. President Chun's talks with President Reagan in Washington in January 1981 seemed to indicate a desire to restore good relations.

Government

Under the 1980 Constitution, executive power is held by the President, indirectly elected for one term of seven years by the Presidential Electoral College, which has more than 5,000 delegates elected by universal, direct and secret ballot. The President governs with the assistance of an appointed State Council (Cabinet), led by a Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, with more than 200 members elected for four years by universal adult suffrage.

Defence

Protection of the Korean frontier is a United Nations' responsibility. Military service lasts for thirty months in the army and the marines, and three years in the navy and air force. In July 1981 the strength of the armed forces was 601,600 men: army 520,000, navy 49,000, air force 32,600. Defence expenditure for 1981 was 2,953,000 million won.

Economic Affairs

The Republic's economy was severely disrupted by the Korean War, but a complete recovery was achieved by the United Nations Korean Rehabilitation Agency (UNKRA) and the United States. Agriculture is the principal source of employment, with 34 per cent of the working population engaged in agriculture and fishing in 1980. Korea was self-sufficient in staple crops in 1977, but this trend did not continue and it is necessary to import rice and other food grains. The chief crop is rice. Wheat, barley and sweet potatoes are also important. Fishing is both an export and a food source, and South Korea is now one of the world's leading ocean-fishing nations. A deep-sea fishing base and associated processing plants have been built at Ulsan, and the port of Masan is also being developed into a fisheries centre. However, the fishing industry has been seriously affected by the establishment of exclusive fishing zones by many countries.

There are substantial coal deposits and other minerals include iron ore, tungsten, gold, graphite and fluorite. Industry is playing an increasingly large role in the economy, particularly textiles, electronics, cars, steel and petrochemicals, and in 1980 the mining and manufacturing sectors accounted for 30.7 per cent of G.N.P. Large loans were secured from Japan, the U.S.A., the World Bank and Western Europe to expand oil refineries to support the petro-chemical industry. A national oil company was established in 1974.

Subsequent to the implementation of the first Five-Year Plan in 1962, real G.N.P. grew at an average annual rate of over 9 per cent, manufacturing output at nearly 20 per cent and the volume of exports at over 30 per cent. In 1979, however, the rise in oil prices slowed economic growth to 6.4 per cent and in 1980 G.N.P. actually fell by 5.7 per cent. Political instability, deepening recession and adverse weather conditions all contributed to the worsening situation. The trade deficit improved in 1980, falling to $4,790 million, compared to $5,290 million in 1979, reflecting a 16.3 per cent increase in exports, which more than offset a 9.6 per cent rise in imports. The decline in the economy in 1980 was accompanied by high inflation, aggravated by a 36 per cent depreciation of the won against the U.S. dollar. The outlook for 1981 seemed more hopeful, with G.N.P. growth forecast at 5-6 per cent.

In August 1981 the fifth Five-Year Plan (1982-86) was announced. During this period G.N.P. is forecast to grow at 7.6 per cent annually and there are plans for increased social development and improved income distribution.

Transport and Communications

There were 5,918 km. of railway track in 1980. In 1980 there were 46,951 km. of roads, of which 15,599 km. were paved. Coastal shipping is important, the chief ports being Pusan, Inchon and Masan. Domestic and international air services are provided by Korean Air Lines. In 1970 a satellite communications system became operational at the Kumsan ground station, which relays signals via Intelstat-3. The first line of the Seoul underground railway system opened in 1974 and the network will eventually cover 142 km.

Social Welfare

The Government provides social relief services for the handicapped, wounded veterans and war widows. Special grants or subsidies are also given to the aged, disaster victims and orphans by numerous official and voluntary bodies. Under the national insurance scheme, medical and industrial accident insurance covers 24 per cent of the total population and 26 per cent of the economically active population. In 1980 the country had 36,096 hospital beds and 25,579 registered physicians.

Education

Primary education between the ages of 6 and 12 is free and compulsory and about 5.6 million children were enrolled in 1981, with 4.4 million in secondary schools. There are 89 universities and colleges and 151 graduate schools. In 1981 student enrolment in higher education was estimated at 580,600. In 1980 adult illiteracy averaged 5.7 per cent (males 2.4 per cent, females 9.1 per cent).

Tourism

Korea has much to offer in mountain scenery, and the temples and museums and the Royal Palaces at Seoul contain many examples of the traditional Korean arts. There are excellent hunting and fishing facilities. Tourism is now a major source of foreign exchange. In 1980 976,415 foreign tourists visited South Korea.

Public Holidays

1982: May 5th (Children's Day), May 11th (Buddha's Birthday), June 6th (Memorial Day), July 17th (Constitution Day), August 15th (Liberation Day), September 12th (Choo-Suk—Korean Thanksgiving Day), October 1st (Armed Forces' Day), October 3rd (National Foundation Day), October 9th (Hangul Nal—Anniversary of Proclamation of Korean Alphabet), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st-3rd (New Year), March 1st (Sam Il Chul—Independence Movement Day), April 5th (Arbor Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, although a number of traditional measures are also used.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 chun = 10 hwan = 1 won.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 1,323.4 won;
U.S. $1 = 688.0 won.

FINANCE

100 chun (jeon)=10 hwan=1 won.

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 50 and 100 won.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 50, 100, 500, 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 won.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=1,323.4 won; U.S. $1=688.0 won.
10,000 won=£7.56=$14.53.

Note: The new won was introduced in June 1962, replacing the hwan at the rate of 1 new won=10 hwan. The hwan had been introduced in February 1953, replacing the old won at the rate of 1 hwan=100 old won. The official exchange rate was initially U.S. $1=100 hwan but subsequently the hwan was frequently devalued. From February 1961 the exchange rate was $1=1,300 hwan. The initial rate of $1=130 new won (£1 sterling=364 new won) remained in force until May 1964, after which the won's value was allowed to fluctuate in a free market. The official buying rate was $1=255 won (£1=714 won) from May 1964 to March 1965. For the next three years the rate was around 270 to 275 won per U.S. dollar, declining to 281 won per dollar (£1=674 won) by the end of 1968 and then to more than 300 won per dollar by November 1969. Depreciation of the won continued and in June 1971 the currency was officially devalued, the new buying rate being $1=370 won (£1=888 won). Further depreciation followed, despite the devaluation of the U.S. dollar in December 1971, and the buying rate was $1=400 won by June 1972. Thereafter the won's value held steady at around that rate (but unchanged by a further dollar devaluation in February 1973) until December 1974, when a new rate of $1=484 won was introduced. This remained in force until January 1980, when a rate of $1=580 won was established. In February 1980 the direct link between the won and the U.S. dollar was broken and the currency was tied to the IMF's Special Drawing Right. The average market rates of won per U.S. dollar were: 348.2 in 1971; 392.9 in 1972; 398.3 in 1973; 400.4 in 1974; 607.4 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution was approved by national referendum in October 1980. The main provisions are summarized below.

THE GOVERNMENT

The President: The President is to be elected by the Presidential Electoral College for one term of seven years. In times of national emergency and under certain conditions the President shall have power to take necessary emergency measures in all matters of State. He shall notify the National Assembly of these measures and obtain its concurrence, or they shall lose effect. He may, in times of war, armed conflict or similar national emergency, declare martial law in accordance with the provisions of law. He shall lift the emergency measures and martial law when the National Assembly so requests with the concurrence of a majority of the members. He is authorized to take directly to the people important issues through national referenda, and may dissolve the National Assembly but not within one year of its formation. A general election shall be held within 30 to 60 days from the date of dissolution. The President shall appoint public officials.

The State Council: The State Council shall be composed of the President, the Prime Minister and no more than 30 and no fewer than 15 others appointed by the President, and shall deliberate on policies that fall within the power of the executive.

The National Assembly: The National Assembly shall be composed of more than 200 members, two-thirds of whom are elected for four years by universal, equal, direct and secret ballot, the remaining third proportioned to the parties as determined by law. A regular session shall be held once a year and extraordinary sessions shall be convened upon request of the President or one-third of the Assembly's members. The period of regular sessions shall not exceed 90 days and of extraordinary sessions 30 days. The legislative power shall be vested in the National Assembly. It has the power to recommend to the President the removal of the Prime Minister or any other Minister. The National Assembly shall have the authority to pass a motion for the impeachment of the President or any other public official.

The Constitution Committee: The Constitution Committee shall be composed of nine members appointed by the President, three of whom shall be appointed from persons selected by the National Assembly and three from persons nominated by the Chief Justice. The term of office shall be six years. It shall pass judgment upon the constitutionality of laws upon the request of the Court, matters of impeachment and the dissolution of political parties. In these judgments the concurrence of six members or more shall be required.

THE JUDICIARY

The courts shall be composed of the Supreme Court, which is the highest court of the State, and other courts at specified levels (for further details see Judicial System, page 753). When the constitutionality of a law is a prerequisite to a trial the Court shall request a decision of the Constitution Committee. The Supreme Court shall have the power to pass judgment upon the constitutionality or legality of administrative decrees, and shall have final appellate jurisdiction over military tribunals.

POLITICAL PARTIES

The establishment of political parties shall be free and the plural party system guaranteed. However, a political party whose aims or activities are contrary to the basic democratic order may be dissolved by the Constitution Committee.

AMENDMENTS

A motion to amend the Constitution shall be proposed by the President or by a majority of the total members of the National Assembly. Proposed amendments to the Constitution shall be put before the public by the President for 20 days or more. Within 60 days of the public announcement, the National Assembly shall decide upon the proposed amendments, which require a two-thirds majority of the National Assembly. They shall then be submitted to a national referendum not later than 30 days after passage by the National Assembly and shall be determined by more than one-half of votes cast by more than one-half of voters eligible to vote in elections for members of the National Assembly. If these conditions are fulfilled, the proposed amendments shall be finalized and the President shall promulgate them without delay.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Under the constitution all citizens are equal before the law. Freedom of speech, press, assembly and association are guaranteed, as are freedom of choice of residence and occupation. No state religion is to be recognized and freedom of conscience and religion is guaranteed. Citizens are protected against retrospective legislation, and may not be punished without due process of law.

Besides legal limitations on certain of these rights as provided for in specific provisions of the constitution, there is a general clause stating that rights and freedoms may be restricted by law when this is deemed necessary for the maintenance of national security, order or public welfare.

KUWAIT

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religio., Flag, Capital

The State of Kuwait lies at the north-west extreme of the Persian Gulf and is bordered to the north-west by Iraq and to the south by Saudi Arabia. In the extreme south-east lies a Partitioned Zone, the oil wealth of which is shared equally between the two concessionaires of Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Kuwait is a desert country with a hot and humid climate: temperatures average 24°C (75°F) and can soar very high, with humidity of 60–80 per cent in July and August. The language is Arabic, but English is widely used. Only half the population are Kuwaitis, the remainder being mostly other Arabs, and a minority of Indians, Pakistanis and Iranians. Islam is the predominant religion and more than 80 per cent of the Muslims are Sunnis. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has horizontal green, white and red stripes, with a black trapezoid next to the staff. The capital is Kuwait City.

Recent History

Until 1961, Kuwait accepted British protection and foreign policy was controlled by the British Government. Kuwait became independent in June 1961 and joined the United Nations in 1963. During 1965 agreement was reached with Saudi Arabia over sharing of oil revenues from the Neutral Zone (now called "Partitioned Zone"). In November 1965 Sheikh Abdullah al-Salim al-Sabah, the first ruler of independent Kuwait, died and was succeeded by his brother, Sheikh Sabah al-Salim al-Sabah. Individual Kuwaiti residents (many formerly Palestinians) have given much financial assistance to the Palestinian guerrilla organizations, while the Government has been granting substantial financial assistance to other Arab states since September 1967.

In January 1971 a more representative national assembly was elected, and an extensive cabinet reshuffle took place for the first time since independence. In 1973 and early 1974 the National Assembly asserted itself by refusing to ratify participation agreements between the Kuwaiti Government and the Kuwait Oil Co., but in May 1974 the National Assembly ratified the agreement giving the Kuwaiti Government 60 per cent participation, finally increased to a 100 per cent holding in December 1975.

Elections to the National Assembly took place in January 1975, when 260 candidates stood for 50 seats. In August 1976 the Amir dissolved the National Assembly for four years and imposed restrictions on the press. He claimed that the National Assembly had been acting against the best interests of the State. On the death of Sheikh Sabah al-Salim al-Sabah in December 1977, his cousin the Crown Prince, Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmad al-Sabah, Prime Minister since 1966, succeeded as Amir. A return to democratic government was promised, and in February 1981 448 candidates contested 50 seats for a new National Assembly. Kuwait rejected the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel in September 1978, and supported Iraq in the Gulf War in late 1980. In May 1981 Kuwait joined with five other Gulf States in setting up the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Government

Under the 1962 Constitution, executive power is vested in the Amir, the Head of State chosen by and from members of the ruling family, and is exercised through a Council of Ministers. The Amir appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. Legislative power is vested in a unicameral National Assembly but it was dissolved by the Amir in August 1976. Elections for a new 50-member National Assembly took place in February 1981. The country is divided administratively into four districts.

Defence

In July 1981 Kuwait had an army of 10,000 men, an air force of 1,900 men (excluding expatriate personnel), and a navy of about 500 men manning 57 vessels. Defence expenditure in 1980 was KD 303 million. There is an 18-month period of compulsory military service.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on extremely rich deposits of petroleum, which in 1980 earned Kuwait revenues of U.S. $18,300 million, compared with U.S. $16,300 million in 1979 and U.S. $9,500 million in 1978.

In order to conserve its reserves, and also because of a fall in demand for oil by consumer countries, Kuwait's crude oil production has declined from the peak of over 3 million b/d in 1972 to about 900,000 b/d in the middle months of 1981. Oil revenues, however, are still large enough to meet the requirements of the State budget. Oil refining and the production of natural gas and fertilizers are increasingly important industries. In recent years there has been a growth of companies which specialize in fund management and investment.

Kuwait was the richest country in the world in terms of G.N.P. per capita in 1975 and 1976, but slipped behind the United Arab Emirates in 1977, regaining its first place in 1978. The Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development continued to make loans to other Arab countries and Kuwait gives financial support to the Arab "confrontation states".

Transport and Communications

There are no railways, and no internal air flights. The 1,920 km. of roads include the dual carriageway from Kuwait City to the border with Iraq. A Kuwait-Saudi highway was completed in 1976 and a motorway system is being developed. The port of Kuwait is an important Middle Eastern port of call and has been modernized. Special oil terminals facilitate oil shipments, the chief one being Mina Al-Ahmadi. Kuwait Airways and a number of foreign airlines provide international air services.

Social Welfare

A comprehensive Social Security Law covers all Kuwaitis. Medical treatment is free to all residents, regardless of nationality, and medical teams from Kuwait assist other Arab governments. By the end of 1979 the country had 13 general and specialized hospitals with over 5,500 beds, and also 600 beds in about 10 private hospitals.

Education

Education is free and is graded into pre-primary (children aged four to six years), primary (six to ten), intermediate (ten to fourteen) and secondary (fourteen to eighteen). There is a technical college and a university. Over 2,000 Kuwaiti students are now receiving education abroad.

Public Holidays

1982: May 21st (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th–October 2nd (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 25th (Kuwait National Day).

1,000 fils = 10 dirhams = 1 Kuwaiti dinar (KD).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 20, 50 and 100 fils.

Notes: 250 and 500 fils; 1, 5 and 10 dinars.

100 Kuwaiti dinars = £185.30 = $356.43.

Note: The Kuwaiti dinar was introduced in April 1961, replacing the Persian Gulf Indian rupee. The dinar's initial value of U.S. $2.80 ($1 = 357.14 fils) remained in force until August 1971. Between December 1971 and February 1973 the dinar's par value was $3.04 ($1 = 328.95 fils). From February 1973 to March 1975 it was $3.3778 ($1 = 296.05 fils) but a fluctuating market rate was also in operation. The Kuwaiti dinar was at par with the pound sterling until November 1967, after which the exchange rate was £1 = 857.14 fils (1 dinar = £1.167) until June 1972. Since March 1975 the dinar's value has been determined in relation to a weighted group of currencies of the country's main trading partners. The average market value of the Kuwaiti dinar was $3.39 in 1973; $3.41 in 1974; $3.45 in 1975; $3.42 in 1976; $3.49 in 1977; $3.64 in 1978; $3.62 in 1979; $3.70 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated November 16th, 1962)

On August 29th, 1976, the Amir suspended four articles of the Constitution dealing with the National Assembly. In early 1980 a 35-member committee was appointed to debate a revised Constitution and presented its recommendation to the Amir. On August 24th, 1980, an Amiri Decree was issued, calling for an elected National Assembly before the end of February 1981. The new Assembly was elected on February 23rd, 1981.

The principal provisions of the 1962 Constitution are as follows:

SOVEREIGNTY

Kuwait is an independent sovereign Arab State; her sovereignty may not be surrendered, and no part of her territory may be relinquished. Offensive war is prohibited by the Constitution.

Succession as Amir is restricted to heirs of the late MUBARAK AL-SABAH, and an Heir Apparent must be appointed within one year of the accession of a new Amir.

EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY

Executive power is vested in the Amir, who exercises it through a Council of Ministers. The Amir will appoint the Prime Minister "after the traditional consultations", and will appoint and dismiss Ministers on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. Ministers need not be members of the National Assembly, though all Ministers who are not Assembly members assume membership ex officio in the Assembly for the duration of office. The Amir also lays down laws, which shall not be effective unless published in the Official Gazette. The Amir sets up public institutions. All decrees issued in these respects shall be conveyed to the Assembly. No law is issued unless it is approved by the Assembly.

LEGISLATURE

A National Assembly of 50 members will be elected for a four-year term by all natural-born literate Kuwait males over the age of 21, except servicemen and police, who may not vote. Candidates for election must possess the franchise and be over 30 years of age. The Assembly will sit for at least eight months in any year, and new elections shall be held within two months of the last dissolution of the outgoing Assembly.

Restrictions on the commercial activities of Ministers include an injunction forbidding them to sell property to the Government.

The Amir may ask for reconsideration of a Bill passed by the Assembly and sent to him for ratification, but the Bill would automatically become law if it were subsequently passed by a two-thirds majority at the next sitting, or by a simple majority at a subsequent sitting. The Amir may declare Martial Law, but only with the approval of the Assembly.

The Assembly may pass a vote of no confidence in a Minister, in which case the Minister must resign. Such a vote is not permissible in the case of the Prime Minister, but the Assembly may approach the Amir on the matter, and the Amir shall then either dismiss the Prime Minister or dissolve the Assembly.

An annual budget shall be presented, and there shall be an independent finance control commission.

CIVIL SERVICE

PUBLIC LIBERTIES

Kuwaitis are equal before the law in prestige, rights and duties. Individual freedom is guaranteed. No one shall be seized, arrested or exiled except within the rules of law.

No punishment shall be administered except for an act or abstaining from an act considered a crime in accordance with a law applicable at the time of committing it, and no penalty shall be imposed more severe than that which could have been imposed at the time of committing the crime.

Freedom of opinion is guaranteed to everyone, and each has the right to express himself through speech, writing or other means within the limits of the law.

The Press is free within the limits of the law, and it should not be suppressed except in accordance with the dictates of law.

Freedom of performing religious rites is protected by the State according to prevailing customs, provided it does not violate the public order and morality.

Trade unions will be permitted and property must be respected. An owner is not banned from managing his property except within the boundaries of law. No property should be taken from anyone, except within the prerogatives of law, unless a just compensation be given.

Houses may not be entered, except in cases provided by law. Every Kuwaiti has freedom of movement and choice of place of residence within the state. This right shall not be controlled except in cases stipulated by law.

Every person has the right to education and freedom to choose his type of work. Freedom to form peaceful societies is guaranteed within the limits of law.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

There is a codified system of law based largely upon the Egyptian system. In criminal matters, minor contraventions are dealt with by Magistrates' Courts, felonies by Criminal Assize Courts. Appeal in the case of misdemeanours is to a Misdemeanours Court of Appeal.

Civil cases are heard by a General Court within which are separate chambers dealing with commercial cases, other civil cases and matters of personal status. Appeal is to a High Court of Appeal. Matters of personal status may go beyond the High Court of Appeal to a Court of Cassation.

In criminal cases, investigation of misdemeanours is the responsibility of the police, while responsibility for the investigation of felonies lies with the Attorney-General's Office.

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Lao People's Democratic Republic is a land-locked country bordered by the People's Republic of China to the north, Viet-Nam to the east, Kampuchea to the south, Thailand to the west and Burma to the north-west. The climate is tropical, with a rainy monsoon season lasting from May to October. The official language, Lao or Laotian, is spoken by about two-thirds of the population. French is spoken widely and there are a number of tribal languages including Meo. The principal religion is Buddhism. There are also some Christians and followers of animist beliefs. The national flag has horizontal stripes of red, blue (half the depth) and red, with a white disc in the centre. The capital is Vientiane.

Recent History

Laos was formerly a part of French Indochina and comprised the three principalities of Luang Prabang, Vientiane and Champassac. These were merged in 1946, when France recognized Sisavang Vong, ruler of Luang Prabang since 1904, as King of Laos. In May 1947 the King promulgated a democratic constitution, though until 1957 only men were allowed to vote. The Kingdom of Laos became independent, within the French Union, in July 1949 and full sovereignty was recognized by France in October 1953. The leading royalist politician was Prince Souvanna Phouma, who was Prime Minister in 1951-54, 1956-58, 1960 and from 1962 to 1975. King Sisavang Vong died in October 1959 and was succeeded by his son, Savang Vatthana.

From 1950 the Royal Government was opposed by the Lao Patriotic Front (LPF), an insurgent movement formed by a group of former anti-French activists. The LPF's Chairman was Prince Souphanouvong, a half-brother of Prince Souvanna Phouma, but its dominant element was the communist People's Party of Laos (PPL), led by Kaysone Phomvihane. The LPF's armed forces became known as the Pathet Lao. During the 1950s the Pathet Lao gradually secured control of the north-east of the country with the assistance of the Vietnamese communists, the Viet-Minh, engaged in war with the French (until 1954). Several agreements between the Royal Government and the LPF, attempting to end the guerrilla war and reunite the country, failed during the 1950s and early 1960s. By 1965 the de facto partition of Laos was established, with the LPF refusing to participate in national elections, and consolidating its power over the north-eastern provinces.

With the "Ho Chi Minh Trail", the communist supply route to South Viet-Nam, running through the Pathet Lao controlled areas, Laos remained closely involved with the war in Viet-Nam. In 1973 the Viet-Nam peace negotiations included provisions for a cease-fire in Laos. A new Government was set up in April 1974 with Royalist, neutralist and LPF participation and with Prince Souvanna Phouma continuing as Prime Minister and Prince Souphanouvong becoming Chairman of the Joint National Political Council. However, the LPF increased its power and, following a change in the composition of the Government, gained effective control, which was confirmed by election victories in many areas in October and November 1975. In November King Savang Vatthana abdicated and Souvanna Phouma resigned.

In December 1975 a National Congress of People's Representatives (264 delegates elected by local authorities) abolished the monarchy and elected a 45-member Supreme People's Council (now known as the Supreme People's Assembly). Souphanouvong was appointed President of the newly named Lao People's Democratic Republic as well as President of the Supreme People's Council. Kaysone Phomvihane, who had become Secretary-General of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party (LPRP, a successor to the PPL), was appointed Prime Minister. Ex-King Savang Vatthana was named Supreme Counsellor to the President but he refused to co-operate with the new regime and was arrested in March 1977. The LPF was replaced in February 1979 by the Lao Front for National Reconstruction, under the leadership of the LPRP.

While the Pathet Lao regime has remained firmly in power, there has been armed opposition to the Government, particularly among the Meo hill tribes. In 1980 the Government claimed that insurgent groups were being trained in southern China to join a rebel organization, the Lao People's National Liberation United Front.

Since 1975 Laos has been heavily dependent on Vietnamese economic and military assistance. In July 1977 a 25-year treaty of friendship between the two countries was signed, and Laos supported the Vietnamese-backed takeover in Kampuchea in January 1979. Following the outbreak of hostilities between China and Viet-Nam in February, Laos allied itself with the latter and several Chinese aid projects were subsequently suspended. In March 1979 the Laotian Government openly accused China of border hostilities.

Between 1975 and 1977 relations with Thailand were strained. Thailand intermittently closed the border to Lao imports and exports, causing considerable hardship. However, with the fall of the militantly anti-communist Government in Thailand in October 1977, there was an improvement in relations and the blockade of goods was lifted. In 1979 agreements providing for border liaison and trade co-operation were signed. However, in June 1980, as a result of a border shooting incident, Thailand once again closed the border for a period of some weeks, reflecting worsening Sino-Indochinese relations. A further short closure occurred early in 1981, but in November a meeting between the Lao and Thai Foreign Ministers showed promise of an improvement in cross-border relations.

Government

In December 1975 a National Congress of People's Representatives proclaimed a republic. The Congress installed a President as Head of State and a Council of Ministers, led by a Prime Minister, to exercise executive power. A Supreme People's Assembly of 45 members, chaired by the President, has been appointed to draft a new constitution.

Political power is held by the Lao People's Revolutionary Party (LPRP). The communist LPRP has a Central Committee with 14 full and six alternate members.

Defence

In July 1981 the estimated strength of the Lao People's Liberation Army was 46,000, the navy 1,700 and the air force 8,000. In 1979 defence expenditure totalled 15,150 million kips. In 1981 there were an estimated 40,000 Vietnamese troops in Laos.

Economic Affairs

The essentially agricultural Laotian economy was severely disrupted by the years of civil war. The principal crop is rice but since 1976 Laos has relied on rice imports, mainly from Thailand, to make up annual shortfalls. In 1976 and 1977 drought and crop pests seriously affected agricultural production, which was even further reduced by severe flooding in 1978. In 1981 rice production exceeded 1.1 million tons, an increase of 9.7 per cent over 1980. Taro, cassava and maize are also grown. There are few exports; timber and electricity are the most important, together accounting for about 60 per cent of export earnings in 1979. In 1980 the Government ordered a temporary suspension of timber exports, pending investigation of corruption and a reorganization of the forestry sector.

Laos has considerable mineral resources, including deposits of tin, lead, zinc, coal, potash, gypsum, iron ore, and small quantities of gold, silver and precious stones. Of these, only tin has been exploited on a significant scale, with two open-cast mines in operation. In 1978/79 production was less than 500 metric tons, compared with 787 tons in 1972. Petroleum deposits are believed to exist in the Vientiane valley. There is considerable potential for the development of hydroelectricity, particularly the Nam Ngum generating station, whose output was 600 million kWh. in 1979, doubling its foreign exchange earnings of 1978. Over 90 per cent of output is exported to Thailand. Manufacturing is relatively undeveloped and is mainly confined to the processing of raw materials and agricultural produce, and the production of handicrafts and basic consumer goods for the home market.

The chronic balance of trade deficit, approximately 32,000 million old kips in 1974, used to be largely financed by U.S. aid. Following the closure of the U.S. aid mission in June 1975, Laos has become increasingly dependent on assistance from the U.S.S.R., Viet-Nam and the East European bloc (particularly Bulgaria), as well as from international organizations, although substantial aid is received from Western countries such as Sweden. For the period of 1979-82 the value of project aid was forecast to total over U.S. $400 million. In 1980 the trade deficit was estimated at U.S. $99.6 million. Most trade is with Japan and Thailand.

In June 1976, in an attempt to curb the high rate of inflation, a new currency, the "liberation kip", was introduced, with an official exchange rate of 200 to the U.S. dollar. However, by November the unofficial rate was about 1,400 to the dollar and inflation continued at a high rate. In May 1978 the liberation kip was devalued by 50 per cent. In December 1979 a currency reform introduced the new kip, equivalent to 100 old kips, but at the same time the currency was devalued by 75 per cent. In January 1980, however, the new kip was revalued to 10 bank kips per U.S. dollar.

The economy improved in 1979 and G.D.P. rose by 6 per cent; higher levels of domestic production led to an improved supply situation and the balance of payments deficit was reduced. In June 1980 a programme was introduced to increase domestic production, encourage exports and promote efficient import use, but Thailand's closure of the common border caused shortages and trading difficulties.

The National Congress of People's Representatives which met in December 1975 stated that the principal aim of the new Government would be to develop agriculture and forestry as the basis for future industrial development. The 1981-85 Plan aims to achieve self-sufficiency in food, further development of exports, improvements in productivity and a better standard of living. In June 1978, in an attempt to increase production, the Government introduced a programme of agricultural collectivization, and 2,800 co-operatives had been established by the end of 1979. In 1980 these measures were abandoned to some extent, as being unsuited to the existing economic system, the largest sector being that of the small producer. However, with the State retaining the most powerful role in the economy, no return to free capitalism was envisaged, but rather a channelling of the benefits of free trading for the collective good.

Transport and Communications

Laos is a land-locked country and the Mekong and its left-bank tributaries form the principal artery of transport, although the size of craft is limited by rapids and traffic is seasonal. There are no railways in Laos but in September 1976 an official communiqué confirmed that studies would be undertaken for the construction of a railway link between Laos and Viet-Nam. In 1979 there were about 16,750 km. of roads. Lao Aviation operates services to Thailand, Viet-Nam and Kampuchea from Wattai airport, at Vientiane.

Social Welfare

In 1979 there were over 620 hospitals and clinics with nearly 8,750 beds. Under the 1981-85 Plan it is aimed to increase the number of beds to 13,000.

Education

Education was largely disrupted by the civil war, causing a high illiteracy rate, but educational facilities have since greatly improved. Primary schooling lasts for five years and secondary education for six years. The illiteracy rate was reportedly reduced from 60 per cent in 1975 to 25 per cent by 1979. In 1978/79 there were 487,000 pupils in elementary schools, 66,000 in secondary schools and 6,600 in senior high schools. In addition, there are 19 central and 22 provincial vocational schools with an enrolment of 10,000, six teacher-training institutes and an art school. The Sisavangvong University has about 1,684 students.

FINANCE

100 at (cents) = 1 new kip.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 new kips.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 19.2 new kips; U.S. $1 = 10.0 new kips.
100 new kips = £5.20 = $10.00.

Note: The kip was introduced in January 1955, replacing (at par) the Indo-Chinese piastre. From May 1953 the piastre's value was 10 old French francs. The initial exchange rate was thus U.S. $1 = 35 kips (1 kip = 2.857 U.S. cents). In October 1958 the currency was devalued by 56 per cent, the new exchange rate being $1 = 80 kips (1 kip = 1.25 U.S. cents). This rate remained in force until the end of 1963. From January 1964 to November 1971 the official exchange rate was $1 = 240 kips (1 kip = 0.417 U.S. cent), although a free market rate also operated officially at around 500 kips to the dollar. In November 1971 this official free rate was fixed at $1 = 600 kips (1 kip = 0.167 U.S. cent) and this became the rate used to convert the value of foreign trade transactions. The official basic rate of $1 = 240 kips was abolished in April 1972, when the basic and free rates were unified at $1 = 600 kips. A financial (selling) rate of $1 = 840 kips was introduced in May 1972. The currency was devalued in March 1975, when the rates were fixed at $1 = 750 kips (buying) or 1,200 kips (selling). In June 1976 the liberation kip was introduced, replacing the former currency at the rate of 1 liberation kip = 20 kips. However, the currency was devalued by 70 per cent so that the exchange rate became $1 = 200 liberation kips. This remained in force until May 1978, when a rate of $1 = 400 liberation kips was introduced. In December 1979 the liberation kip was replaced by a new "kip national", worth 100 of the former units. At the same time the currency was devalued by 75 per cent, so that the exchange rate was set at U.S. $1 = 16 new kips. In January 1980 the rate was adjusted to $1 = 10 new kips. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 576 kips (official) from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 1,563.43 kips (free market) from December 1971 to June 1972.

LEBANON

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Lebanon lies at the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, with Syria to the north and east and Israel to the south. The climate varies widely, coastal lowlands being hot and humid in summer and mild in winter but in the hills there is a heavy winter snowfall. Rainfall is on the whole abundant. Arabic is spoken everywhere and French and English are widely understood. The population is almost equally divided between Christians and Muslims. The Christians are mainly Maronites, but many other sects flourish. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of red, white (half the depth) and red. In the centre of the white stripe is a cedar tree. The capital is Beirut.

Recent History

Lebanon was formerly part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. In 1918 Turkish forces were expelled by British and French troops, with Arab help. Lebanon was administered by France, under a League of Nations mandate, from 1920 until independence was declared on November 26th, 1941. A republic was established in 1943 and full autonomy was granted to the new state in January 1944. All foreign troops left the country by December 1946.

When the republic was established the various communities agreed on a delicate balance of power. The distribution of seats in the Chamber of Deputies is on a religious basis and there is a convention that the President is a Maronite Christian and the Prime Minister a Sunni Muslim. The relative stability of the country until the mid-1970s enabled it to become the commercial and financial centre of the Middle East—a position which has been threatened by continuing political uncertainty.

Lebanon's first President was Sheikh Bishara el-Khoury. He held office from 1943 until resigning, after allegations of corruption, in 1952. His successor was Camille Chamoun, who granted votes to women and adopted a pro-Western foreign policy. Following elections to the Chamber in 1957 there was considerable unrest, mainly among Muslims who favoured a closer alignment with Egypt and Syria. By 1958 civil disturbances had grown into a full-scale insurrection, with Muslim and Christian forces in conflict. In July 1958, near the end of his term of office, President Chamoun appealed to the U.S.A. for military assistance. U.S. forces, totalling about 10,000, quickly arrived in Beirut and remained until October, by which time peace had been restored. Meanwhile, the Chamber elected Gen. Fuad Chehab, commander of the armed forces, to be the next President. He held office until 1964 and was followed by Charles Hélou (1964-70) and Sulaiman Franjiya (1970-76).

After the establishment of Israel in 1948, Lebanon accepted thousands of Palestinian refugees, many of whom still live in camps in southern Lebanon. The country also joined in the Arab policy of boycotting Israel. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), founded in 1964, has its headquarters in Beirut. Lebanon has for many years allowed various Palestinian guerrilla organizations to have bases within its borders, and guerrilla raids from these bases into Israel have frequently provoked reprisals from Israel.

The presence of Palestinian guerrilla groups provided the spark which began the civil war which lasted from April 1975 to October 1976. The war began over the killing of some Muslim (mainly Palestinian) travellers. The underlying reason for the war, however, was because the population balance between Christians and Muslims, which had been slightly in favour of the Christians in 1943 when the formula for the allocation of parliamentary seats and administrative posts was adopted, has shifted in favour of the Muslims, who thus feel under-represented. Also the Muslims identify with the Arab world while the Christians look towards the West. It was for these reasons that the war escalated from a clash between Palestinian guerrilla groups and the Maronite (Christian) militia to a full-scale confrontation between the largely conservative Christian population and the National Movement comprising leftist Muslims and Palestinian guerrilla groups. Numerous attempts at mediation were made by Arab and Western states and more than 50 ceasefires proved abortive until Arab summit meetings in Riyadh and Cairo secured a more durable ceasefire in October 1976.

Syrian intervention played an important part in the conflict. Syrian mediation secured a temporary ceasefire in January 1976 and Syrian troops intervened from April 1976 onwards. By mid-1976 Syrian troops were committed against the Palestine guerrillas, and an Arab Peace-keeping Force, under the sponsorship of the Arab League, failed to stop the fighting. A more effective 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force (mainly Syrians) arrived as a result of the ceasefire in October 1976, and for a while prevented the renewal of full-scale fighting. Spasmodic fighting, however, continued in the south of the country near the Israeli border and, in spite of the Shtoura Agreement of July 1977 which endeavoured to regulate the Palestinian base camps and introduce a reconstituted Lebanese army into the border area, there was renewed fighting in March 1978, when a raid by Fateh guerrillas provoked Israeli retaliation. Israeli forces advanced into southern Lebanon and the UN Security Council effected an Israeli withdrawal and set up a UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) of 4,000 (6,000 by 1981) to maintain peace. The withdrawing Israeli forces, however, handed over to a right-wing, mainly Christian, Lebanese militia who maintained links with the Israelis.

After renewed fighting in Beirut between the Syrian troops of the Arab Deterrent Force and right-wing Christian militias, the Foreign Ministers of the Arab Deterrent Force states met at Beiteddin, near Beirut, and agreed in late 1978 on a Declaration aimed at bringing peace to Lebanon. It maintained that State authority must be imposed, armed militias must be curbed, and a truly national army must be formed. Attempts by the Lebanese Government to implement the Beiteddin Declaration and later Arab resolutions have met with little success. Since April 1979 Major Saad Haddad, a right-wing Lebanese army officer, has maintained a 700 square mile area of "independent free Lebanon" and has enjoyed Israeli support. In July 1980 the Phalangist militia overcame the National Liberal Party militia and dominated the area north of Beirut. In April 1981 Syrian troops laid siege to Phalangist-occupied Zahle, and a major crisis developed when Israel threatened to destroy the SAM missiles which Syria had introduced. The siege was lifted at the end of June after mediation by the Saudi and Kuwaiti Ambassadors.

President Sulaiman Franjiya was succeeded by Elias Sarkis in September 1976. Throughout the civil war Rashid Karami had been Prime Minister, but he was succeeded by Dr. Selim Hoss and a government of eight technocrats in December 1976. Dr. Hoss introduced a new 12-member government in July 1979, but offered his resignation in June 1980 on the grounds that no progress had been made towards political accord. In July Takiyeddin Solh was unable to form a government, and it was not until October 1980 that Chafic al-Wazzan was able to form a Cabinet. Elections to the Chamber of Deputies (later renamed National Assembly), due in April 1976, were postponed for up to 26 months and subsequently the term of the Assembly has been extended until June 1983.

Government

Legislative power is normally held by the Chamber of Deputies, with 99 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), using proportional representation. Seats are allocated on a religious basis (53 Christian, 45 Muslim). Executive power is vested in the President, elected for six years by the Chamber. He appoints a Prime Minister and other ministers to form a Cabinet, responsible to the Chamber. In December 1976 the Chamber gave the Cabinet power to rule by decree.

Elections to the Chamber (renamed "National Assembly" in March 1979), due in April 1976, have been postponed until 1983.

Defence

The Lebanese army disintegrated into a number of factions during the civil war. A new army, under the command of General Victor Khoury, is slowly being constituted, and numbered 22,250 in July 1981. The air force numbered 1,250 and the navy 250. The 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force consists mainly of Syrians. The mandate of the 6,000-strong United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL—see Recent History) has been extended to mid-June 1982.

Economic Affairs

Lebanon has traditionally favoured a private enterprise economy. Many people are employed in service industries, relatively few in agriculture. The principal crops are grain, olives and citrus fruits. Lebanon is a free market and about two-thirds of trade is transit traffic, Beirut being in normal times the principal commercial and financial centre of the Middle East. The civil war severely crippled the economy and Beirut's long-term position as the commercial centre of the Middle East is under threat. Many of the foreign banks moved elsewhere and Beirut port and airport were closed. Beirut port and airport reopened soon after the civil war and many of the banks quickly returned, but, because of the lack of a permanent political settlement and sporadic outbreaks of renewed fighting, there has been a reluctance to return on the part of foreign companies. A £L22,000 million reconstruction plan aims to rebuild large buildings, roads and other installations over a five-year period. Continued violence throughout 1981, however, has thwarted any real attempt to revive the economy.

Transport and Communications

There are over 400 kilometres of railway. Towns are connected by good roads and there is heavy traffic between Beirut and Damascus, the capital of Syria. Beirut is a major port for the eastern Mediterranean. The port of Tripoli is the terminus of an oil pipeline from Iraq, and Sidon of the pipeline from Saudi Arabia. Beirut is an important international air junction. Communications were severely disrupted by the civil war, and have been periodically disrupted since then. The port of Beirut is subject to closure on account of the fighting.

Social Welfare

A scale of compensation for loss of employment was introduced by the State in 1963. Medical services are largely in private hands but there is a Social Security Fund which covers the medical expenses of workers. Under a national agreement, wages are paid by employers for up to 26 weeks during sickness.

Education

There is state primary and secondary education but private institutions provide the main facilities for secondary and higher education. The literacy rate of 75 per cent is the highest in the Arab world.

Tourism

Lebanon is normally a tourist centre for the Middle East. Scenic beauty, sunshine and historical sites, notably Baalbek and Byblos, are the main attractions. Before the civil war, about two million tourists visited the country annually. In 1974 tourism contributed 20 per cent of the country's income, but by 1978 it was only 7.4 per cent.

Public Holidays:

1982: May 1st (May Day), May 20th (Ascension Day, Western Church), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 15th (Assumption), September 29th (Id ul Adha), October 28th (Ashoura), November 1st (All Saints' Day), November 22nd (Independence Day), December 25th (Christmas Day), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet), December 31st (Evacuation Day).

100 piastres=1 Lebanese pound (£L).

Coins: 1, 2½, 5, 10, 25 and 50 piastres; 1 pound.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 25, 50, 100 and 250 pounds.

£L100=£11.29 sterling=$21.72.

Note: A basic official exchange rate of U.S. $1=£L3.08 was introduced in January 1956. This remained in effect until February 1973, despite the devaluation of the U.S. dollar in December 1971. The official exchange rate was £1 sterling=£L7.392 from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 sterling=£L8.026 from December 1971 to June 1972. However, the basic rate was used only for official exchange operations and for the valuation of official assets and customs duties. All commercial transactions take place on the basis of a fluctuating free market rate, established in November 1948. From 1954 to 1972 the exchange rate in the free market fluctuated between £L2.97 and £L3.37 per U.S. dollar. In February 1973, when the U.S. dollar was again devalued, the Lebanese pound appreciated considerably on the free market. At the same time a new official rate of $1=£L2.772 was introduced but this became inoperative in March 1973, since when official valuations have been based on an "effective" rate whose parity is adjustable from month to month. The average market rates (£L per U.S. dollar) were: 3.1568 in 1968; 3.2546 in 1969; 3.2690 in 1970; 3.2277 in 1971; 3.0507 in 1972; 2.6104 in 1973; 2.3278 in 1974; 2.3095 in 1975; 2.9037 in 1976; 3.0690 in 1977; 2.9554 in 1978; 3.2428 in 1979; 3.4361 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated May 23rd, 1926; amended by the Constitutional Laws of 1927, 1929, 1943 and 1947.)

According to the Constitution, the Republic of the Lebanon is an independent and sovereign State, and no part of the territory may be alienated or ceded. Lebanon has no State religion. Arabic is the official language. Beirut is the capital.

All Lebanese are equal in the eyes of the law. Personal freedom and freedom of the Press are guaranteed and protected. The religious communities are entitled to maintain their own schools, provided they conform to the general requirements relating to public instruction as laid down by the State. Dwellings are inviolable; rights of ownership are protected by law. Every Lebanese citizen who has completed his twenty-first year is an elector and qualifies for the franchise.

Legislative Power

Legislative power is exercised by one house, the Chamber of Deputies, with 99 seats, 53 of which are allocated to Christians and 45 to Muslims (for full details of allocation, see Legislature, p. 794). Its members must be over 25 years of age, in possession of their full political and civil rights, and literate. They are considered representative of the whole nation, and are not bound to follow directives from their constituencies. They can be suspended only by a two-thirds majority of their fellow-members. Secret ballot was introduced in a new election law of April 1960.

The Chamber holds two sessions yearly, from the first Tuesday after March 15th to the end of May, and from the first Tuesday after October 15th to the end of the year. The normal term of the Chamber of Deputies is four years; general elections take place within sixty days before the end of this period. If the Chamber is dissolved before the end of its term, elections are held within three months of dissolution.

LEBANON

Voting in the Chamber is public—by acclamation, or by standing and sitting. A quorum of two-thirds and a majority vote is required for constitutional issues. The only exceptions to this occur when the Chamber becomes an electoral college, and chooses the President of the Republic, or Secretaries to the Chamber, or when the President is accused of treason or of violating the Constitution. In such cases voting is secret, and a two-thirds majority is needed.

Executive Power

The President of the Republic is elected for a term of six years, and is not immediately re-eligible. He and his ministers deal with the promulgation and execution of laws passed by the Chamber of Deputies. The Ministers and the Prime Minister are chosen by the President of the Republic. They are not necessarily members of the Chamber of Deputies, although they are responsible to it and have access to its debates. The President of the Republic must be a Maronite Christian and the Prime Minister a Sunni

The Constitution, The Government, Legislature

Muslim; and the choice of the other Ministers has to reflect the division between the communities in the Chamber.

The President himself can initiate laws. Alternatively, the President may demand an additional debate on laws already passed by the Chamber. He can adjourn the Chamber for up to a month, but not more than once in each session. In exceptional circumstances he can dissolve the Chamber and force an election. Ministers can be made to resign by a vote of no confidence.

Elections to the Chamber of Deputies, due in April 1976, were postponed for up to 26 months. In January 1978 the Chamber's term was further extended to June 1980. A further extension in April 1980 prolonged the life of the Chamber until June 1983.

In December 1976 the Chamber of Deputies gave the Government power to rule by decree for six months, subsequently extended until January 1978. In March 1979 the Chamber was renamed the National Assembly.

LEGISLATURE

MAJLIS AL-UMMA

(National Assembly)

The electoral reform bill of April 1960 maintained the existing ratio of 6 Christians to 5 Muslims in the Chamber of Deputies. It is the custom for the President of the Chamber of Deputies to be a Shi'a Muslim. The Chamber was renamed the "National Assembly" in March 1979.

President: KAMAL ASAAD.

Vice-President: MOUNIR ABU-FADEL.

There was a General Election in May 1972, but the diversity of allegiance in the Chamber makes a strict analysis by party groupings impossible. The distribution of seats among religious groups is laid down by law. The elections due in April 1976 were postponed for up to 26 months and in January 1978 the term of the Chamber of Deputies was further extended until June 1980. In April 1980 the term was extended until June 30th, 1983.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Law and justice in the Lebanon are administered in accordance with the following codes, which are based upon modern theories of civil and criminal legislation:

- (1) Code de la Propriété (1930).
- (2) Code des Obligations et des Contrats (1932).
- (3) Code de Procédure Civile (1933).
- (4) Code Maritime (1947).
- (6) Code de Procédure Pénale (Code Ottoman Modifié).
- (7) Code Pénal (1943).
- (8) Code Pénal Militaire (1946).
- (9) Code d'Instruction Criminelle.

The following courts are now established:

(a) Fifty-six "Single-Judge Courts", each consisting of a single judge, and dealing in the first instance with both civil and criminal cases; there are seventeen such courts at Beirut and seven at Tripoli.

(b) Eleven Courts of Appeal, each consisting of three judges, including a President and a Public Prosecutor, and dealing with civil and criminal cases; there are five such courts at Beirut.

(c) Four Courts of Cassation, three dealing with civil and commercial cases and the fourth with criminal cases. A Court of Cassation, to be properly constituted, must have at least three judges, one being the President and the other two Councillors. The First Court consists of the First President of the Court of Cassation, a President and two Councillors. The other two civil courts each consist of a President and three Councillors. If the Court of Cassation reverses the judgment of a lower court it does not refer the case back but retries it itself.

First President of the Court of Cassation: EMILE ABOUK-HEIR.

(d) The Council of State, which deals with administrative cases. It consists of a President, Vice-President and four Councillors. A Commissioner represents the Government.

President of the Court of the Council of State: ANTOINE BAROUD.

(e) The Court of Justice, which is a special court consisting of a President and four judges, deals with matters affecting the security of the State.

In addition to the above, Islamic, Christian and Jewish religious courts deal with affairs of personal status (marriages, deaths, inheritances, etc.).

There is also a Press Tribunal.

* The 1974 figures for members of the Roman Catholic churches are based on estimates by the curias of dioceses based in the Lebanon. National and diocesan boundaries do not necessarily correspond.

It will be seen that the largest single community in the Lebanon is the Maronite, a Uniate sect of the Roman Church. The Maronites inhabited the old territory of Mount Lebanon, i.e. immediately east of Beirut. In the south, towards the Israeli frontier, Shi'a villages are most common whilst between the Shi'a and the Maronites live the Druzes (divided between the Yazbakis and the Jumblatis). The Beka'a has many Greek Christians, while the Tripoli area is mainly Sunni Muslim. Altogether, of all the regions of the Middle East, the Lebanon probably presents the closest juxtaposition of sects and peoples within a small territory. As Lebanese political life is organized on a sectarian basis, the Maronites also enjoy much political influence, including a predominant voice in the nomination of the President of the Republic.

THE PRESS

The most important dailies are al-Anwar and an-Nahar, which have the highest circulations, The Daily Star, al-Jarida and L'Orient-Le Jour, the foremost French paper. The latter two are owned by Georges Naccashe, former Lebanese ambassador to France, and tend to take a pro-government line. In a country where most of the élite speak French the other French daily, Le Soir, is also influential, and, for the same reason, the twice-weekly publication Le Commerce du Levant occupies an important place in the periodical Press.

The civil war hindered the operation of the Press, but even at the height of the civil war about two dozen newspapers and magazines appeared, reflecting every shade of political opinion. In January 1977, however, censorship was imposed on all publications. Some papers ceased publication, if only temporarily. Before this, Lebanon enjoyed the reputation of having one of the freest presses in the Middle East and was an important base for foreign correspondents. Some Lebanese papers have since introduced London and Paris editions.

FINANCE

BANKING

Beirut has for long been the leading financial and commercial centre in the Middle East, as can be seen from the extensive list of banking organizations given below. However, public confidence in the banking system was strained by the closing of the Intra Bank, the largest domestic bank, late in 1966 when its liquid funds proved insufficient to cope with a run of withdrawals. The bank obtained enough guarantees to re-open in January 1968, though it is now an investment bank managed by a New York company. The civil disturbances between April 1975 and October 1976 considerably disrupted Beirut's banking and commercial facilities.

ROADS

Lebanon has 7,100 km. of roads, of which 1,990 km. are main roads. Most are generally good by Middle Eastern standards. The two international motorways are the north-south coastal road and the road connecting Beirut with Damascus in Syria. Among the major roads are that crossing the Beka'a and continuing south to Bent-Jbail and the Chtaura-Baalbek road. Hard-surfaced roads connect Jezzine with Moukhtara, Bzebdine with Metn, Meyroub with Afka and Tannourine. A Beirut-Tripoli Highway improvement scheme is being carried out with help from the World Bank and should be completed in 1983.

SHIPPING

Siège Provisoire de la Commission Portuaire: Immeuble de l'Electricité du Liban, Rue du Fleuve, Beirut.

Beirut is the principal port of call for the main shipping and forwarding business of the Levant; the port has frequently been closed by political disturbance. Tripoli, the northern Mediterranean terminus of the oil pipeline from Iraq (the other is Haifa), is also a busy port, with good equipment and facilities. Saida is still relatively unimportant as a port. Shipping was disrupted by the civil war.

There are many shipping companies and agents in Beirut. The following are some of the largest:

"Adriatica" S.p.A.N.: Rue du Port, Imm. du Port de Beyrouth, P.O.B. 1472; Gen. Man. J. WEHBE.

LESOTHO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Lesotho is a land-locked enclave in the Republic of South Africa. The climate is generally mild, although cooler in the highlands. Rainfall averages about 700 mm. (28 inches) per year, mostly falling between October and April. The official languages are English and Sesotho. More than 80 per cent of the population are Christians, mainly Roman Catholic, Lesotho Evangelical and Anglican. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is blue with green and red vertical stripes at the hoist, and a white Basotho hat in the centre. The capital is Maseru.

Recent History

Basutoland's progress to independence as the Kingdom of Lesotho was initiated by the Constitution of 1959 which established representative government. In 1965 Basutoland became self-governing under a new constitution, with a bicameral parliament and a ministerial council, for which Chief Leabua Jonathan's Basotho National Party (BNP) narrowly won the elections. Lesotho achieved independence from the United Kingdom on October 4th, 1966. Following the general election in 1970, in which the opposition Basotho Congress Party (BCP) claimed to have won a majority, Chief Jonathan, the Prime Minister, declared a state of emergency, suspended the constitution and arrested Ntsu Mokhehle and other leaders of the BCP. King Moshoeshoe II was placed under house arrest and later exiled, though he returned later that year after accepting a government order prohibiting the monarchy from participating in politics. Political instability returned in early 1974 with the failure of an attempted coup, which was followed by the introduction of strict new security laws.

In 1974 Chief Jonathan accepted proposals to draft a new constitution which would retain the constitutional monarchy, but he continues to rule by means of a National Assembly of Chiefs and Cabinet nominees, dominated by the BNP. Moves towards political reconciliation have not been successful and in 1979 there was increased violence, resulting in a flow of refugees to South Africa and Botswana. The BCP split into two factions, internal and external, in 1975. Chief Jonathan sought to draw support away from the external wing, which is backed by the Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA), by announcing amnesties for political exiles in September 1980 and May 1981. The LLA made a series of bomb attacks in Lesotho in the second half of 1981 to put pressure on Chief Jonathan to call an internationally-supervised general election.

Lesotho is economically dependent on South Africa, but rejects the latter's apartheid policy. The independence granted by South Africa to the Transkei "homeland" in October 1976 is not recognized by Lesotho. The consequent effective closure of Lesotho's border with Transkei has been especially damaging as the mountainous terrain between Maseru and the quarter of the population who live in the south-west of the country makes communication impossible except by air. Tension was exacerbated by a South African decision to stop subsidizing exports of wheat and maize to Lesotho, and by Chief Jonathan's renewed claims to South African territory in the Orange Free State, Lesotho Government allegations that South Africa was supporting BCP incursions, and Lesotho's establishment of diplomatic links with Cuba and the U.S.S.R.

In February 1978 Transkei introduced stringent entry regulations for all Basothos wishing to pass through Transkei. The measures, interpreted as an attempt to force Lesotho to recognize Transkei's independence, halted virtually all traffic from Lesotho into Transkei, cut off migrant workers from the South African mines in which they were employed, and prevented Lesotho traders from bringing in food supplies from South Africa. In December 1980 a state of national emergency was declared because of the effects of a serious drought.

Lesotho has embarked on a more open foreign policy, including closer links with socialist countries such as Cuba, Mozambique, the U.S.S.R. and Yugoslavia. Plans to reduce the country's dependence on South Africa include a telecommunications link with Nairobi, a new international airport, a road construction programme, and membership of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Government

Lesotho is an hereditary monarchy. The King is Head of State but has no political power. In 1970 the Prime Minister declared a state of emergency, dissolved Parliament and suspended the constitution. The Cabinet, formerly responsible to Parliament, assumed full power. A National Assembly of 93 members, comprising the former Senate (22 Chiefs and 11 Senators nominated by the King) and 60 members nominated by the Cabinet, was inaugurated in 1973. There is also a College of Chiefs which has the power under traditional law to depose the King by a majority vote. Lesotho comprises nine administrative districts, each under an appointed District Commissioner.

Defence

The small, but expanding, Lesotho Paramilitary Force is drawn from government supporters, and numbered 1,500 in 1980; in 1979 Chief Jonathan announced a plan to convert the Lesotho Paramilitary Force into a national army to cope with the deteriorating security situation.

Economic Affairs

The economy is primarily agricultural, with about 45 per cent of the G.D.P. and 87 per cent of employment provided by agriculture. The main crop is maize, though substantial amounts of wheat, sorghum, peas and beans are grown. Yields are low and variable, and large quantities of food are imported, principally from South Africa. The major livestock products are wool and mohair, which are marketed for export. There is an acute land shortage and severe soil erosion due to overgrazing. Development is hampered by a complicated and archaic system of land tenure and is concentrated on five large rural schemes, largely financed from abroad. The planned five-year Basic Agricultural Services Programme is intended to improve farming practices and raise the level of farm incomes throughout the country.

Water is an important resource and the Highland scheme, due to commence construction in the mid-1980s, includes plans for the export of water to South Africa in addition to hydroelectricity production. Minerals are scarce but the Letseng-la-Terai diamond mine, in which the Government has a 25 per cent share, began production in 1977. Total production increased from 15,000 carats in 1977 to over 105,000 carats in 1980. The Government is to receive profits on a sliding scale of 62.3 per cent to 72 per cent. Diamonds have been the largest export sector since 1978 and the Romanian Government has expressed interest in developing potential uranium deposits in the Teyateyaneng region of the country. Manufacturing contributed 4 per cent to G.D.P. in 1979 and, with the advantages of proximity and duty-free access to the South African market and plentiful labour, has good growth potential. The Lesotho National Development Corporation (LNDC), supplemented in 1977 by the Basotho Enterprise Development Corporation, has attracted some industry to Lesotho, especially tourism.

The economy of Lesotho is overwhelmingly dependent upon South Africa, especially for employment; about 50 per cent of the male Basotho workforce was employed there in 1980, many in the mines, and their remittances constituted about 40 per cent of G.N.P. Lesotho, with Botswana and Swaziland, forms part of the customs and monetary area of South Africa, although it became responsible for its own monetary policy and financial institutions in 1974. Its share of the customs receipts provided 65 per cent of the current revenue in 1979. In addition, the Lesotho Bank is entitled to hold 60 per cent of Basotho mine workers' wages by way of deferred payments, and these rose from R43 million in 1974 to an estimated R101 million in 1977, but fell to R88 million in 1978. Lesotho regularly has a massive trade deficit, although it is partly offset by the inflow of foreign exchange from the earnings of migrant workers and from aid payments.

Lesotho's second five-year plan, for 1976-80, exceeded its expenditure target of 112 million maloti, concentrating on agricultural and rural development. The third five-year plan, for 1981-85, aims to increase national economic independence and provide new opportunities for industry and employment. However, domestic wage employment is expected to increase by only 11,000, while the labour force grows by 92,000.

Effective closure of the Transkei border, with its attendant problems, led the UN to declare in 1977 that Lesotho needed two programmes for 1977-80: an emergency scheme to cover road and air transport and food distribution, costing R57.1 million, and an accelerated development programme costing R40.7 million. These did not supplant the five-year plan. In 1977 the LNDC announced that it intended to spend R15-20 million by 1980 to reduce the country's dependence on South Africa.

Transport and Communications

The only railway is one mile of South African Railway line at Maseru. The main road from Butha-Butha to Quthing is 304 km. long, of which 144 km., from Leribe to Tsoaing, is tarred. There are 589 km. of minor roads. The road system has been expanded to deal with problems caused by closure of the Transkei border. There are international air links through Leabua Jonathan Airport at Maseru and 32 airstrips throughout the country. The only external air links are with South Africa, Mozambique, Swaziland and Botswana. Construction of a R40 million international airport to be built at Thota-Moli, about 20 km. from Maseru, was expected to begin by the end of 1981.

Social Welfare

The Government runs eleven hospitals, including a mental hospital and a leper settlement, and 87 rural health clinics and is planning to build a R18.5 million hospital at Maseru. In addition, there are eight mission hospitals. In 1976 the country had 2,198 hospital beds and 59 physicians. The service is hampered by the location of hospitals in urban areas, whereas most of the population are rurally-based. Efforts are being made to expand health education.

Education

All primary education is free, and is largely in the hands of the three main missions (Lesotho Evangelical, Roman Catholic and Anglican) under the direction of the Ministry of Education. In 1979 235,604 pupils attended 1,080 primary schools, and 21,406 pupils attended 63 secondary schools. In 1975 the Roma campus, near Maseru, of the University of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland was nationalized to form the National University of Lesotho, which had 1,060 students in 1981. In 1979 adult literacy of 50 per cent was one of the highest rates in Africa.

Tourism

Lesotho's scenic beauty, including a spectacular national park at Sehlabathebe, offers great opportunities for tourism, and the industry is being steadily developed. Luxury hotels have been built, principally with South African backing, and there are plans for a ski resort in the Maluti mountains and for a second national park on the Qeme plateau. There were an estimated 132,000 tourist arrivals in 1978, mostly from South Africa.

Public Holidays

1982: May 2nd (King's Birthday), May 20th (Ascension Day), July 2nd (Family Day), October 1st (National Sports Day), October 4th (National Independence Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March 12th (Moshoeshoe's Day), March (National Tree Planting Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

THE CONSTITUTION

(The 1966 Constitution was suspended in January 1970 and a Commission to propose a new system of government set up in November 1974).

The King, Motlotlehi Moshoeshe II, is Head of State and constitutional monarch. The executive body is the Cabinet consisting of the Prime Minister and not fewer than 7 other Ministers. There are two houses in the Parliament. The Senate contains the 22 principal chiefs and 11 other persons nominated by the King.

The National Assembly has 60 members elected by universal adult suffrage in 60 single member constituencies. The Prime Minister must be able to command majority support in the National Assembly. If challenged, the Government must establish in the courts that, where there are several ways of achieving its objective, the means least restrictive of civil liberties have been chosen.

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

H.M. King MOSHOESHOE II (succeeded as Paramount Chief 1960; became King at independence, October 4th, 1966).

LEGISLATURE

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The Constitution provides for an elected National Assembly of 60 members and a Senate of 33 members (22 chiefs and 11 nominees of the King). The Assembly elections of January 1970 were annulled by the Prime Minister, who suspended the Constitution. No further elections have been held but an interim Assembly of 93 members (the former Senate and 60 nominated members) was inaugurated on April 27th, 1973. Seven members of the Congress Party, including its leader, who were nominated as members boycotted the Assembly, and replacements have since been nominated.

Speaker: J. T. KOLANE.

RAILWAYS

The territory is linked with the railway system of the Republic of South Africa by a short line from Maseru to Marseilles on the Bloemfontein/Natal main line.

ROADS

The main road system, 896 km., is principally confined to the western lowlands. A 144-km. stretch of the main lowland road, from Leribe in the north to Tsoaing, past Maseru, has been bitumenized and is now all-weather. The road is being extended towards Mohale's Hoek and parts of it are being improved to an all-weather gravel surface. Many other new roads, principally in the mountains, are being constructed under self-help campaigns and with the assistance of the UN, and the Government has given top priority to road construction. There are 589 km. of minor roads serving trading stations and Basotho villages; these are maintained by the traders and subsidized by the Government. There are about 2,560 km. of bridle paths which are constructed and maintained by the Basotho Administration.

LESOTHO

LIBERIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Liberia lies on the west coast of Africa, with Sierra Leone and Guinea to the north and the Ivory Coast to the east. The climate is tropical, with temperatures ranging from 18°C (65°F) to 49°C (120°F). English is the official language but the 16 major ethnic groups speak their own languages and dialects. Liberia is officially a Christian state, though some Liberians hold traditional beliefs. There are about 100,000 Muslims. The national flag (proportions 19 by 10) has 11 horizontal stripes, alternately of red and white, with a navy blue square canton, containing a five-pointed white star, in the top left-hand corner. The capital is Monrovia.

Recent History

President Tubman, in office since 1944, died in July 1971 and was succeeded by his Vice-President, William R. Tolbert, who was re-elected in October 1975. While continuing to pursue the "open door" economic and foreign policies of his predecessor, President Tolbert encouraged national development along the lines of "Liberianization" and self-sufficiency. The True Whig Party's monopoly of power met with increasing criticism and in May 1978 the main opposition group, the Progressive Alliance of Liberia (PAL), held its first conference. Liberia's reputation for political stability was shaken in April 1979 when a government proposal to increase the price of rice was followed by riots, bloodshed and looting. President Tolbert assumed emergency powers, while the municipal elections which were due to take place in November were postponed until the following June. In January 1980 the People's Progressive Party (PPP) was allowed to register, but in March its leader, Gabriel Bacchus Matthews, was arrested after calling for a national strike. On April 12th President Tolbert was assassinated in a military coup whose leader, Master Sergeant (later Commander-in-Chief) Samuel Doe, took over power as Chairman of a People's Redemption Council, suspending the Constitution and banning all political parties.

The new regime was severely criticized, and temporarily banned from OAU and ECOWAS meetings, after its summary execution in April of 13 former senior government officials accused of corruption and mismanagement. Foreign relations improved, in mid-1981, when a commission was appointed to draft a new Constitution and it was announced that Liberia would return to civilian rule, after the document was completed, by August 1985. In July 1981, however all civilian ministers received commissions, thus installing total military rule.

Government

In April 1980 Liberia was placed under martial law. The highest governing body is the People's Redemption Council, which has full legislative and executive powers and in December 1981 had 12 members and 10 co-members.

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces of Liberia consisted of an army of 5,400, a navy of 250, an air force of 250 and a paramilitary force of 1,750 men. Military service commences at the age of 16.

Economic Affairs

The economy is predominantly agricultural, about 90 per cent of the population living off the land. Much farming is at subsistence level but rubber-growing, mainly on large plantations owned by foreign companies, employs over half the wage-earning population. In 1979 rubber exports (chiefly to the U.S.A.) constituted 15.1 per cent of total export earnings. Other major cash crops are coffee and cocoa, while production of palm oil for export is also being encouraged. The chief food crops are rice and cassava. Timber resources are vast, sawn timber forming 12.7 per cent of total export earnings in 1979.

Liberia is the second largest African producer of iron ore, which, like rubber, is exploited mainly by foreign investors. The Liberian-American-Swedish Minerals Company constructed Africa's first pelletizing plant at Buchanan, a new port and a railway connecting it to the mines at Nimba. In 1980 plans were announced for the construction of an iron and steel works. Diamonds form another important source of export earnings.

Foreign investment in Liberia has been vast, and totalled L$746 million at the end of 1979. The country's second development plan, covering the period 1981-85, aims at increasing incomes and production in the rural sector by improving the infrastructure and establishing producer co-operatives. Self-sufficiency in rice is aimed for by the end of the Plan. The Government has set up an industrial free zone in Monrovia in an attempt to develop the small manufacturing sector of the economy and reduce the 20 per cent unemployment rate.

Liberia's currency is at par with the U.S. dollar. The decline in its value, together with rising oil prices and the fall in demand for iron ore, contributed to a foreign debt of $700 million in 1980. Foreign trade and investment declined drastically after the April 1980 coup. Liberia professes a non-aligned stance, and foreign aid comes from the World Bank, the EEC, the African Development Bank and Arab development funds, while the main individual donors are the U.S.A., the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom.

The Mano River Union, formed in 1973, provides for close economic co-operation between Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea, the three countries forming a single customs union. Studies for a major joint hydroelectric scheme were completed in 1981. Liberia is a member of ECOWAS and the OAU.

Transport and Communications

There are 490 km. of railways, which are privately owned, and about 9,973 km. of private and public roads. About $109 million was to be invested in road construction and development under the 1981-85 Development Plan. There are four ports including the deep-water berths at Monrovia. A large number of vessels based in many countries are registered as belonging to the Liberian merchant fleet, which is the largest in the world. Air Liberia and foreign lines operate internal and international air services.

Social Welfare

Basic health services are limited and there is no adequate state welfare system. A National Social Security and Welfare Corporation was established in 1976 to administer pensions, sickness benefit and welfare funds, and preparations for a national social insurance scheme began in 1977. In 1977 there were 178 physicians, 253 clinics, 32 hospitals and 21 health centres. There is free care of children until the age of two.

Education

Primary and secondary education are free, and the Government provides a 50 per cent subsidy for university education. Between 1974 and 1977, about 150 new schools were opened, and secondary and university student enrolment increased by over 50 per cent. In 1978 there were 237,853 pupils enrolled in 1,441 schools. A L$24 million National Education Plan was launched in 1980 to improve educational facilities. In spite of the increased part played by education in national development, 69.5 per cent of the population remained illiterate in 1980.

Tourism

Tourism is slowly being developed, though communications outside Monrovia are poor and this is a major hindrance to expansion, as is the scarcity of funds for tourist facilities. There were 6,000 tourists in 1976.

Public Holidays

1982: May 14th (National Unification Day), July 26th (Independence Day), August 24th (National Flag Day), November 29th (President Tubman's Birthday), December 25th (Christmas Day).

THE CONSTITUTION

Liberia's Constitution dates from independence in 1847. On April 25th, 1980, martial law was declared and the Constitution was suspended "until further notice". All legislative and executive powers were vested in the People's Redemption Council. In April 1981 it was announced that a new constitution was being drafted.

The Constitution of 1847 is modelled on that of the United States of America. Authority is divided into the Legislative, the Executive and the Judicial.

Legislative authority is vested in a Legislature consisting of two Houses: the Senate, with 18 members, elected for a six-year term; and the House of Representatives, elected for four years, consisting of 84 members.

The Executive power rests with the President, who, with the Vice-President, is elected for an eight-year term after which he can no longer stand for office, in accordance with a constitutional amendment approved in 1975.

LEGISLATURE

In the October 1975 elections 74 candidates of the ruling True Whig Party were elected to the legislature, thus securing all the seats in the House of Representatives and half of those in the Senate, which then numbered 65 and 18 respectively. Following the military coup on April 12th, 1980, the future of the legislature was uncertain but the new Head of State promised "wide participation of the people" in decision-making. The Constitution was suspended on April 25th and legislative and executive powers were assumed by the People's Redemption Council.

POLITICAL PARTIES

All political parties were banned after the coup in April 1980.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Before the military coup in April 1980, judicial authority was vested in the Supreme Court, the Circuit Courts, the Magistrate Courts and the Justice of the Peace Courts. There were ten Circuit Courts, two in Monrovia and one in each of the other eight counties. A decree issued by the People's Redemption Council in April 1980, following the suspension of the Constitution, established a People's Supreme Tribunal, with limited powers, consisting of seven judges appointed by the PRC. In February 1982 it was renamed the People's Supreme Court, and its chairman and members became the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the People's Supreme Court. People's Circuit and Magistrate Courts were restored in May 1980.

LIBYA

(The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya)

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (Libya) extends along the Mediterranean coast of North Africa. Its neighbours are Tunisia and Algeria to the west, Niger and Chad to the south, Egypt to the east and Sudan to the south-east. The climate is dry and desert conditions prevail over most of the territory, with temperatures between 13° and 38°C (55° and 100°F). Arabic is the official language but English and Italian are used in trade. The great majority of the population are Muslims. The national flag is plain green. The capital is Tripoli.

Recent History

Formerly an Italian colony, Libya was conquered in 1942 by British and French troops, Cyrenaica and Tripolitania being subsequently governed by the British and Fezzan by the French. The United Kingdom of Libya was formed in 1951, following a UN Resolution of 1949. Muhammad Idris as-Sanusi, Amir of Cyrenaica, became King Idris of Libya. The country enjoyed internal political stability and good relations with both the Arab world and the West, though oil supplies to the latter were restricted immediately after the "Six-Day War" between Israel and the Arab states in June 1967.

The bloodless revolution of September 1969 brought a group of young nationalist army officers to power and deposed the aged King, then convalescing abroad. The officers established a Revolution Command Council (RCC), with Col. Muammar al-Gaddafi as Chairman, and proclaimed the Libyan Arab Republic. In June 1971 the Arab Socialist Union (ASU) was established as the country's sole political party.

Under Gaddafi, Libya has assumed a much more active role in the Arab world. Various schemes for Arab unity led to the formation in January 1972 of the Federation of Arab Republics, comprising Libya, Egypt and Syria. In 1972 Libya concluded an agreement with Egypt to merge the two countries in 1973. Neither of these unions proved effective and in January 1974 Col. Gaddafi proposed union with Tunisia, which also proved abortive. The next scheme for union was with Syria in September 1980. This also is proving ineffective. An intention to merge with Chad was announced in January 1981.

In April 1973 Col. Gaddafi introduced a "cultural revolution" involving the formation of people's committees and an attempt to run the country on an Islamic basis. Relations with Egypt, already tense following the failure of Libya-Egypt union, further deteriorated when President Sadat embarked on the October 1973 war with Israel without consulting Col. Gaddafi. Relations with Egypt have remained strained since then, with an outbreak of border fighting in July 1977. Internal problems developed in 1975, with an attempted coup against Col. Gaddafi. The General National Congress of the ASU held its first session in January 1976 and later became the General People's Congress (GPC), which first met in November 1976.

In March 1977 the GPC endorsed Gaddafi's plans to change the official name of the country to The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Power was vested in the people through People's Congresses and Popular Committees. The RCC disappeared, and a General Secretariat of the GPC (with Col. Gaddafi as Secretary General) was established. The GPC elected Col. Gaddafi as Revolutionary Leader of the new state. The Council of Ministers was replaced by the General People's Committee, with 26 members, each a Secretary of a Department. Libya objected very strongly to Sadat's peace initiative with Israel in November 1977, and Tripoli was the venue for a summit of Arab "rejectionist" states which immediately followed Sadat's visit to Jerusalem.

In early March 1979 Gaddafi resigned from his post of Secretary General of the General Secretariat of the GPC to devote more time to "preserving the revolution". The General Secretariat of the GPC was reorganized and the General People's Committee was also reorganized and reduced.

Although Gaddafi has continued to support the Arab cause and condemned the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, he has also concerned himself increasingly with African affairs. He has interfered in the troubles in Chad, eventually securing the survival of President Goukouni Oueddei's Government in N'Djamena in the fighting in late 1980. About 10,000 Libyan troops remained in Chad, however, and in October 1981 President Goukouni requested their removal. Libyan troops began pulling out in November and were replaced by an OAU peace-keeping force.

Relations with the U.S.A. deteriorated in 1981. The Reagan administration had made plain that it objected to Libya's presence in Chad and in August 1981 relations became even more strained when U.S. fighters shot down two Libyan jets which had intercepted them over the Gulf of Sirte. In November the U.S. oil company Exxon announced that it was closing down its Libyan operation, and in December President Reagan alleged that a Libyan hit-squad had been sent to assassinate him.

Government

Power is vested in the people through People's Congresses, Popular Committees, Trade Unions, Vocational Syndicates, and the 1,112-person General People's Congress (GPC), with its General Secretariat. The Head of State is the Revolutionary Leader, elected by the GPC. Executive power is exercised by the General People's Committee, which comprises 22 Secretaries, each responsible for a Department. The country is divided into three provinces and 10 Governorates.

Defence

Libya's armed forces totalled 55,000 in July 1981.

Military service is compulsory, and consists of a three-year period for the army and four years for the navy and air force. The army, which numbered 45,000 in 1981, is equipped with British and Soviet tanks, while France has supplied jet fighters for the 5,000 strong air force. Libya's defence budget for 1978 amounted to LD 130 million.

Economic Affairs

Until several years after independence Libya had to rely on U.S., U.K. and UN aid to supplement a primarily subsistence agriculture with some export of livestock, hides and skins, nuts and seeds. From 1955 to 1970 prospecting for petroleum yielded increasing returns and Libya is among the major oil producers in the world. Expansion was particularly rapid owing to political stability, nearness to the Western European markets, and to the oil's freedom from sulphur which makes it especially suitable for refining. Libya now has the highest gross national product per head in Africa and oil now accounts for over 95 per cent of export earnings, although it provides employment for less than 10 per cent of the total labour force. By September 1980, however, agreements were being signed with three Western oil companies in an attempt to find more oil fields in order to sustain the 1980 production of 1.79 million b/d beyond the mid-1980s.

Libya also exports liquefied natural gas. In common with other oil-producing countries, Libya has been entering into participation agreements with some of the foreign oil companies operating on its soil and in some cases has nationalized their assets. It has been in the forefront of moves to limit oil production and secure higher prices for crude oil since 1973. Average daily oil production in 1979 was 2.1 million barrels, the highest annual level since 1973, but production fell disastrously in 1981. The main reason was the lack of demand for Libya's relatively high-priced oil at a time of world surplus, and oil revenues fell from the 1980 level of U.S. $22,000 million to about $7,000 million. A recovery is expected in 1982, following the price cut of November 1981. Workers' committees are taking over both public and private businesses. In February 1980 G.D.P. growth was said to have averaged 9.5 per cent per year over the previous four years.

Transport and Communications

Good main roads run along the coast, and inland from Tripoli to Sebha, chief city of the Fezzan area. The Tripoli-Benghazi highway has been improved. The port of Tripoli is a natural deep-water harbour and those of Benghazi and Tobruk are being improved. A new port named Qasr Ahmed opened in Misurata in June 1978. Tripoli and Benina (for Benghazi) are international airports and there are plans to revive a railway system.

Social Welfare

The Government runs free health services, including two big hospitals in Benghazi and Tripoli. There is a scheme of pensions and national insurance. In 1979 there were 13,418 hospital beds, with a target of 14,166 in 1980. Low-cost housing is also provided.

Education

Primary education is compulsory and there are secondary schools and institutes for agricultural, technical and vocational training. In 1979/80 there were over 2,500 primary schools with over 30,000 teachers and 650,000 pupils. There are universities in Tripoli and Benghazi.

Tourism

Tripoli, with its beaches and its annual International Fair, attracts numerous visitors, while three Roman provincial cities, Sabratba, Leptis Magna and Cyrene, are of considerable interest. Inland are the historic oases of Ghadames and Mizda.

Public Holidays

1982: May 25th (Sudanese National Day), June 11th (Evacuation Day), July 23rd, 24th (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 1st (Revolution Day), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 7th (Evacuation Day), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: March 28th (Evacuation Day).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Libyan Arab People, meeting in the General People's Congress in Sebha from March 2nd to March 28th, 1977, proclaimed its adherence to freedom and its readiness to defend it on its own land and anywhere else in the world. It also announced its adherence to socialism and its commitment to achieving total Arab Unity; its adherence to the moral human values, and confirmed the march of the revolution led by Col. Muammar al-Gaddafi, the revolutionary leader, towards complete People's Authority.

The Libyan Arab People announced the following:

- (i) The official name of Libya is henceforth The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.
- (ii) The Holy Koran is the social code in The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.
- (iii) The Direct People's Authority is the basis for the political order in The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The People shall practise its authority through People's Congresses, Popular Committees, Trade Unions, Vocational Syndicates, and The General People's Congress, in the presence of the law.
- (iv) The defence of our homeland is the responsibility of every citizen. The whole people shall be trained militarily and armed by general military training, the preparation of which shall be specified by the law.

The General People's Congress in its extraordinary session held in Sebha issued four decrees:

The first decree announced the establishment of The People's Authority in compliance with the resolutions and recommendations of the People's Congresses and Trade Unions.

The second decree stipulated the choice of Col. Muammar al-Gaddafi, the Revolutionary Leader, as Secretary General of the General People's Congress.

The third decree stipulated the formation of the General Secretariat of the General People's Congress (see The Government, below).

The fourth decree stipulated the formation of the General People's Committee which comprises 26 Secretaries (reduced to 21 in March 1979) to carry out the tasks of the various former ministries (see The Government, below).

In February 1979 it was announced that the Secretariats were to be reorganized and their functions delimited. In March 1979, when Col. Gaddafi resigned from the post of Secretary General of the General People's Congress, the number of Secretaries of the General People's Committee was reduced to 21. Since 1979 progress has been made in furthering the spread of People's Committees in political and economic life.

LEGISLATURE

GENERAL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS

The Senate and House of Representatives were dissolved after the coup d'état of September 1969, and the provisional constitution issued in December 1969 made no mention of elections or a return to Parliamentary procedure. However, in January 1971 Col. Gaddafi announced that a new Parliament would be appointed, not elected; no date was mentioned. All political parties other than the Arab Socialist Union were banned. In November 1975 provision was made for the creation of the General National Congress of the Arab Socialist Union, which met officially in January 1976. This later became the General People's Congress, which met for the first time in November 1976 and in March 1977 began introducing the wide-ranging changes outlined in "The Constitution" (above).

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

President of the Supreme Court: MUHAMMAD ALI AL-JADI.

The law of the Judicial System of 1954 established the following courts: the Federal Supreme Court, the Courts of Appeal, the Courts of First Instance and the Summary Courts. Sittings are in public, unless the court decides to hold them in camera in the interests of decency or public order. Judgment is in all cases given in public. The language of the courts is Arabic, but there is a translation office attached to each Court to help non-Arabic speaking parties or lawyers.

In October 1971 the Revolution Command Council decreed that all legislation should conform with the basic principles of Islamic Law and set up committees to carry this out. In April 1973 Colonel Gaddafi declared that any legislation likely to impede the progress of the revolution or to defeat public interest must be repealed. In September 1979 Colonel Gaddafi announced that judicial power was to be put in the hands of People's Committees for Justice.

The Supreme Court consists at present of a Chief Justice and ten justices.

Courts of Appeal exist in Tripoli, Benghazi and Misurata, consisting of a President, Vice-President and three judges; judgments must be given by three judges. Each Court of Appeal includes a Court of Assize consisting of three judges.

Courts of First Instance are set up in the provinces, consisting of a President, Vice-President and a number of judges; judgment in these courts is given by one judge.

Summary Courts, composed of one judge, exist within the territorial jurisdiction of every Court of First Instance.

The People's Court is a special court set up by decree in October 1969 and is particularly concerned with cases of political and administrative corruption.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

The most important road is the 1,822 km. national coast road from the Tunisian to the Egyptian border, passing through Tripoli and Benghazi. It has a second link between Barce and Lamluda, 141 km. long. The other national road runs from a point on the coastal road 120 km. south of Misurata through Sebha to Ghat near the Algerian border (total length 1,250 km.). There is a branch 260 km. long running from Vaddan to Sirte. There is a road crossing the desert from Sebha to the frontiers of Chad and Niger.

In addition to the national highways, the west of Libya has about 1,200 km. of black-top and macadamized roads and the east about 500 km. All the towns and villages of Libya, including the desert oases, are accessible by motor vehicle.

SHIPPING

Principal ports are Tripoli, Benghazi, Port Brega and the Oasis Marine Terminal at Es-Sider. Port Brega was opened to oil tankers in 1961. A 30-inch crude oil pipeline connects the Zelten oilfields with Marsa El Brega. Another pipeline joins the Sarir oilfield with Marsa Hariga, the port of Tobruk, and a pipeline from the Sarir field to Zuetina was opened in 1968. There is another oil port at Ras Lunuf, and a port is being developed at Darna. Libya also has the use of Tunisian port facilities at Sfax and Gabès, to alleviate congestion at Tripoli.

Libyan General Maritime Transport Organization: 10 Garnaia St., P.O.B. 4673, Tripoli; f. 1970 to handle all projects dealing with maritime trade; in June 1981

Libya's merchant fleet consisted of 23 vessels, 13 of which were tankers.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are four civil airports: Tripoli International Airport, situated at Ben Gashir, 34 km. (21 miles) from Tripoli; Benina Airport 19 km. (12 miles) from Benghazi; Sebha Airport; Misurata Airport (domestic flights only).

Libyan Arab Airlines: P.O.B. 2555, Tripoli; f. 1965; passenger and cargo services from Tripoli and Benghazi to London, Paris, Zürich, Frankfurt, Warsaw, Rome, Belgrade, Istanbul, Amman, Athens, Madrid, Malta, Beirut, Damascus, Jeddah, Tunis, Algiers, Casablanca, Niamey, Cotonou, Moscow and Sofia; domestic services throughout Libya; fleet of 10 Boeing 727-2000, 8 F-27; Chair. of People's Committee ALI AGHILA HANNOUSHI; Vice-Chair. MUHAMMAD M. ABREBISH.

Libya is also served by the following foreign airlines: Aeroflot (U.S.S.R.), Air Algérie, Alitalia (Italy), Biman (Bangladesh), British Caledonian, ČSA (Czechoslovakia), Interflug (German Democratic Republic), JAT (Yugoslavia), KLM (Netherlands), Korean Air Lines (Republic of Korea), LOT (Poland), Lufthansa (Federal Republic of Germany), MALEV (Hungary), Malta Airlines, PIA (Pakistan), Saudia (Saudi Arabia), Sudan Airways, Swissair, Syrian Arab, TAROM (Romania), Tunis Air, UTA (France).

MACAU

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Capital

Macau comprises the peninsula of Macau, an enclave on the mainland of southern China, and three nearby islands, the two Taipa islands and Coloane. It lies opposite Hong Kong on the western side of the mouth of the Xijiang (Sikiang) river. Climate is tropical. The official language is Portuguese, but English and Cantonese are widely spoken. The predominant religions are Roman Catholicism and Chinese Buddhism. The capital, the city of Macau, is situated on the peninsula.

Recent History

Established by the Portuguese in 1557 as a trading post with China, Macau became a Portuguese Overseas Province in 1951.

After the military coup in Portugal in April 1974, Colonel José Garcia Leandro was appointed Governor of the province. A new statute promulgated in February 1976 redefined Macau as a "Special Territory" under Portuguese legislature, but with a greater measure of administrative and economic independence. The 17-seat legislature, headed by the Governor, consists of six elected members, five appointed by the Governor and six chosen by business associations. Proposals to enlarge the Legislative Assembly from 17 to 21 members, thus giving the Chinese population a greater say in the running of Macau, were abandoned when they did not receive the approval of the Government of the People's Republic of China in March 1980. Upon the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Portugal in February 1979, it was announced that Macau would remain under Portuguese administration.

In February 1979 Colonel Leandro was replaced as Governor by Gen. Nuno de Melo Egídio, deputy chief of staff of Portugal's armed forces, who visited Beijing in March 1980. The Chinese Government has expressed no wish to alter the legal status of Macau, as was confirmed in 1981 by the unopposed appointment as Governor of Commodore Vasco Almeida e Costa, a Portuguese former minister and naval commander.

Defence

The official Portuguese garrison has been replaced by the Comando de Forças de Segurança (Comforseg) of 1,800 men, which consists of a paramilitary force of about 150 men and the fire brigade and police force. Military service lasts for one year and is voluntary only for Chinese residents.

Economic Affairs

The mainstays of Macau's economy are textile manufactures and tourism, but other industries, such as plastics, electronics and precision instruments, have also been introduced. However, all development projects are hampered by the territory's chronic water shortage. The lack of an effective taxation system has exacerbated economic difficulties and the pataca was unofficially "floated" in 1975 after a HK $30 million loan was secured from banking groups in the province. In 1977 the pataca was linked to the Hong Kong dollar, rather than to the Portuguese escudo. Macau's own currency-issuing bank was opened in October 1980. In 1977 gambling accounted for one-third of total government income. In 1976 exports increased by 60 per cent over 1975, giving Macau its first trade surplus for many decades. This high rate of growth could not be maintained in the following two years, but in 1979 the total value of exports reached 2,014.3 million patacas, an increase of 65 per cent, with clothing and knitwear accounting for about 78 per cent.

Tourism

Tourism is now a major industry. The main attractions are gambling, dog-racing and the annual Macau Grand Prix. The majority of visitors travel by sea-ferry, jetfoil and hydrofoil services from Hong Kong. Over 4 million tourists visited Macau in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 10th (Camões Day, Corpus Christi), June 24th (St. John the Baptist, Patron Saint of Macau), August 15th (Assumption), October 1st (Chinese Mid-Autumn Festival), October 5th (Portuguese Republic Day), November 1st (All Saints' Day), November 2nd (All Souls' Day), December 1st (Restoration of Portuguese Independence, 1640), December 8th (Immaculate Conception), December 24th, 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), January-February* (Chinese Lunar New Year), April 1st-4th (Easter), April 25th (Portuguese National Day, anniversary of 1974 coup).

* From the first to the third day of the first moon of the lunar calendar.

100 patacas=£8.98=$17.27.

Note: From January 1968 to February 1973 the pataca was valued at 4.80 Portuguese escudos. The exchange rate was U.S. $1=5.990 patacas from January 1968 to August 1971; and $1=5.677 patacas from December 1971 to February 1973. In terms of sterling, the rate was £1=14.375 patacas from January 1968 to August 1971; and £1=14.793 patacas from December 1971 to June 1972. From February 1973 to April 1977 the official exchange rate was 1 pataca=5.00 escudos but the pataca's value in terms of most other currencies was fixed in relation to its rate against the Hong Kong dollar, which was frequently adjusted. In April 1977 the link with the escudo was ended and the currency was tied to the Hong Kong dollar, initially at a parity of HK $1=1.075 patacas. Exchange rates against other currencies are determined by reference to rates against the Hong Kong dollar, which also circulates freely in Macau.

THE CONSTITUTION

The constitution of Macau is embodied in an organic statute of Portugal promulgated in February 1976.

Macau, comprising the town of Nome de Deus de Macau (God's Name of Macau) and the Taipa and Coloane islands, has administrative, economical, financial and legislative autonomy.

The sovereign organs of Portugal, except the Law Courts, are represented in the territory by the Governor. In foreign relations and international agreements or conventions, Macau is represented by the President of Portugal who may delegate to the Governor if the matters concern the territory only.

The judicial power is independent and it is regulated by legislation enacted in Portugal.

The Governor

The Governor is nominated after the local population is consulted, through the Legislative Assembly, and dismissed by the President of Portugal, to whom he is responsible politically. He has a rank similar to a Minister of Government in Portugal.

The Secretaries-Adjunct

The Secretaries-Adjunct, up to five in number, are nominated and dismissed by the President of Portugal on the Governor's proposal. Each has a rank similar to a Secretary of State of Government in Portugal.

They exercise the executive powers which have been delegated by the Governor.

The Superior Council of Security

The Superior Council of Security works in conjunction with the Governor who presides over it. It comprises the Secretaries-Adjunct, the Commander, Second-Commander and Chief of General Staff of the Security Forces, and three deputies elected by the Legislative Assembly. Its duties are to settle and to co-ordinate directives relating to the security of the territory.

The Legislative Assembly

The Legislative Assembly comprises 17 deputies with a mandate of three years. Five deputies are appointed by the Governor from among residents of recognized reputation, six are elected by direct and universal suffrage and six elected by indirect suffrage.

The President of Portugal can dissolve the Assembly in the public interest on the Governor's recommendation.

The Consultative Council

The Consultative Council is presided over by the Governor and has five elected members (two elected by the members of the administrative bodies and from among them, one by organizations representing moral, cultural and welfare interests, and two by associations with economic interests; three statutory members (the Secretary-Adjunct for the Civil Administration Services, the Attorney of the Republic and the Chief of Finance Services); and two members nominated by the Governor.

Judicial System

Ordinary justice is administered directly from Portugal.

Under the superintendence of the Attorney of Portugal are the Delegate of the Attorney of the Republic, the Delegation of the Attorneyship of the Republic, the Services of Registries and of Notarial Affairs, the Judiciary Police, and the Cabinet of the Government's Juridical Consultation.

Finance

Macau draws up its own budget, which is annual and unitary.

The issuing bank of Macau will be the Government's banker of the territory.

The annual public accounts of the territory must be submitted to the judgment of the Administrative Law Court.

THE GOVERNMENT

Governor: Commodore VASCO ALMEIDA E COSTA.

Dr. JOÃO ANTÓNIO MORAIS DA COSTA PINTO (Economic Co-ordination).

Dr. JOSÉ AUGUSTO ROQUE MARTINS (Social Welfare).

The Cabinet comprises five secretaries who are appointed and relieved by the President of Portugal on the Governor's advice. There is a consultative committee of ex officio and nominated members representing the Chinese community.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Seventeen members, five appointed by the Governor, six elected directly and six indirectly, serve for three years.

The Assembly elects its President from among its members, by secret vote.

President: Dr. CARLOS D'ASSUMPTIÃO.

POLITICAL GROUPS

There are no political parties but a number of civic associations exist. The three represented in the Legislative Assembly are: the conservative Associação para a Defesa dos Interesses de Macau (ADIM), the Centro Democrático de Macau (CDM) and the Grupo Independente de Macaenses (GIMA), an independent group.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Courts of First Instance. These administer the Legal Code of Metropolitan Portugal. Cases may be finally referred to the Court of Second Instance and the Supreme Court in Lisbon.

MADAGASCAR

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Republic of Madagascar comprises one large island and several much smaller ones in the western Indian Ocean, about 500 km. off the coast of Mozambique. The climate is tropical. The northern parts of the island receive monsoon rains from December to April but the rest of the country is fairly dry. The official languages are Malagasy and French. Hova and other dialects are widely spoken. About half the population follow animist beliefs, Christians constitute about 40 per cent and the remainder are Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has a vertical white stripe (one-third of the length) at the hoist and horizontal stripes of red and green. The capital is Antananarivo (formerly Tananarive).

Recent History

Formerly a French colony, Madagascar became an autonomous state within the French Community in October 1958, as the Malagasy Republic. In May 1959 Philibert Tsiranana, leader of the Parti social démocrate (PSD), was elected President. The country achieved full independence on June 26th, 1960. Before independence France encouraged the PSD, identified with the majority coastal tribes (côtiers), as an alternative to the more nationalistic highland people, the Merina, the traditional ruling group in the island. Conflict between these two groups underlies the island's recent history.

After 1967 the economy declined and there was growing opposition to the Government's authoritarianism and subservience to French interests. In May 1972 President Tsiranana handed over full powers to his Chief of Staff, Major-Gen. Gabriel Ramanantsoa, who initiated a drive to "Malagasize" education and industry, and a reorientation of foreign policy was begun in which co-operative agreements with France were renegotiated. Under the Minister of the Interior, Col. Richard Ratsimandrava, the traditional rural assemblies of the Merina, the fokonolona, were revived and expanded to replace the French administration.

Opposition came from extreme left elements, supporters of ex-President Tsiranana and côtiers who resented the domination of the new government by Merinas. The economy declined and there was widespread discontent caused by inflation, unemployment and food shortages. Though the elections to the People's National Development Council in October 1973 provided a great victory for pro-government parties, the economic situation continued to worsen during 1974. On December 31st, rebellious security forces attempted a coup and precipitated a crisis within the Government. On February 5th, 1975, Gen. Ramanantsoa handed over full power to Col. Richard Ratsimandrava, Minister of the Interior. Six days later, however, the new Head of State was assassinated. On February 12th Brig.-Gen. Gilles Andriamahazo assumed power at the head of a military directorate and imposed martial law. The rebel security forces were swiftly subdued and all political parties were suspended.

In June 1975 the military directorate resigned after electing Lt.-Commdr. Didier Ratsiraka, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, to be Head of State as Chairman of the Supreme Revolutionary Council (SRC). In a referendum in December over 94 per cent of voters approved a new constitution, a Socialist Revolutionary Charter (the "Little Red Book") formulated by Ratsiraka, and the appointment of Ratsiraka as President of the Republic for seven years. The Charter formulated the policy of expanding the fokonolona in order to carry out administrative and agrarian reforms in accordance with its radical socialist ideology. The constitution altered the country's name to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

In January 1976 the Government and judicial institutions were reformed. Colonel Joël Rakotomalala was appointed Prime Minister but the civilian element in the Government was increased and representatives of different regions and parties were included in the power structure. In March the Avant-garde de la révolution malgache (AREMA) was founded as the nucleus of the single national party, provided for in the constitution, and order was re-established. In July, however, the death of Rakotomalala precipitated a series of conflicts which were halted only by the achievement of AREMA domination. The new cabinet, formed in August under Justin Rakotoniana, of civilians committed to a more militant socialism provoked the opposition of the bourgeoisie and the impatience of the radicals. To bolster itself against criticism the Government began to organize AREMA cells throughout the country, greatly alarming the other parties. Elections held at all levels from March to June 1977 resulted in overwhelming victories for AREMA. After the elections to the fokonolona and the Provincial Councils, the left-wing MONIMA, led by Monja Jaona, withdrew from the elections and the Government and was proscribed. The Front National pour la Défense de la Révolution Socialiste Malgache, of which AREMA is the nucleus, presented the sole list of candidates for election to the new National People's Assembly. Rakotoniana resigned in July and a new Council of Ministers was formed under Lt.-Col. Désiré Rakotoarijaona; new appointments were made to the SRC which was extended to include leaders of the former political parties, and more côtiers, in an effort to restore political equilibrium.

However, political and social discontent was demonstrated by two alleged coup attempts in 1980; unrest grew after the arrest of Monja Jaona. Although MONIMA agreed in March 1981 to rejoin the FNDR and Jaona became a member of the SRC, riots and looting continued.

Madagascar's foreign policy is officially non-aligned and, while it has close links with communist countries (particularly the People's Republic of China), its chief trading partners are western. Relations with France have been affected by disputes over compensation for nationalized French assets and the French claim to the Iles Glorieuses and three other islets off the coast of Madagascar (the UN voting in 1980 that the islets be restored to Madagascar), but France has continued to be Madagascar's principal trading partner and supplier of aid.

Government

According to the Constitution of December 1975, the supreme legislative authority is the National People's Assembly, with 137 members elected by universal suffrage for a five-year term. The Head of State is a President elected for seven years by universal adult suffrage. The President is Chairman of a Supreme Revolutionary Council. The members of the Council are chosen by the President, one-third of them from a list presented by the National People's Assembly. The President appoints a Prime Minister and endorses his choice of ministers. Local government has a four-tier structure based on traditional village assemblies (fokonolona).

Defence

In July 1981 total armed forces numbered 19,550 men: army 18,000, navy 650 and air force 900. There is a paramilitary gendarmerie of 8,000. Defence expenditure in 1979 was U.S. $101.9 million.

Economic Affairs

The economy is principally agricultural, with 85 per cent of the population living on the land. Agricultural production is mainly for subsistence, rice being the staple crop, but also forms the bulk of exports. The most important cash crop is coffee, followed by cloves and clove oil, vanilla and sugar. Large herds of cattle are maintained but contribute little to the economy. There are extensive mineral deposits, chromite being the most important. Other minerals include graphite, mica, quartz, celestine, phosphates, shale oil, bauxite, uranium and iron, but commercial exploitation is limited. The oil refinery at Toamasina, based on imported petroleum, has contributed significantly to exports since 1967. There are plans for an oil shale refinery at Bemolanga, due to begin production in 1985, and which will eventually meet domestic needs and provide a small surplus for export. Industry is at present confined largely to processing agricultural produce and manufacturing textiles, although a plan was announced in 1980 to create and develop industry over the next 20 years. A hydroelectric power plant at Andekaleka was due to be commissioned in May 1982.

The economy has long been dominated by foreign business interests but since 1972 successive governments have extended state control of essential sectors and imposed strict controls on foreign-owned enterprises. Ratsiraka's government has nationalized banking and insurance, and has taken control of the major industrial and commercial organizations. There has been a serious drop in private investment from abroad since 1972, but foreign aid, mainly from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the EEC, enables the economy to survive. Madagascar withdrew from the Franc Zone in 1973 but France continued to support the Malagasy currency. Both the balance of payments and the budget show a deficit, whilst the fluctuating inflation rate stood at over 18 per cent in 1980. External debts totalled U.S. $1,100 million in 1981. There are sporadic shortages of basic commodities, especially rice, which must now be imported. Agricultural reform is a priority; the Government aims to continue the drive for self-sufficiency in food and the development of export crops by increasing productivity and bringing more land under cultivation.

Transport and Communications

The terrain is difficult and transport is not well developed. There are 1,035 km. of railway, mainly single track and narrow gauge. Of the 28,000 km. of roads and tracks, most can be used only in dry weather. Most of the west coast rivers are navigable for about 160 km., and on the east coast the Pangalanes canal follows the coast from Toamasina to Farafungana. The chief ports are Toamasina, Mahajanga and Antseranana. The international airport is at Ivato, near Antananarivo, and there is an extensive internal airways network which provides the main means of travel, especially in the wet season.

Social Welfare

All medical services are free and there are family allowances as well as benefits for industrial accidents and occupational diseases. Much welfare is offered by Christian missions. In 1976 the country had 19,781 hospital beds and 767 physicians.

Education

Madagascar has both public and private schools. In 1975 an estimated 85 per cent of children aged 6 to 11 years attended primary schools but only 11 per cent of those aged 12 to 17 received secondary education. There is one university, with five regional centres, attended by 22,857 students in 1979. The education system is being remodelled to suit local conditions and needs, but some reforms are causing controversy. Since 1976 six years' education has been officially compulsory.

Tourism

Plans to develop tourism and increase the number of tourists proved over-optimistic. In 1977 9,000 tourists visited Madagascar; there were 1,785 tourist beds and revenue from tourism was estimated at U.S. $2.5 million.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), May 30th (Whitsun), June 26th (Independence Day), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 25th (Christmas), December 30th (Anniversary of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar).

1983: January 1st (New Year), March 29th (Commemoration of 1947 Rebellion), April 1st (Good Friday), April 4th (Easter Monday).

FINANCE

100 centimes = 1 franc malgache (Malagasy franc).

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 50 and 100 francs MG.

Notes: 50, 100, 500, 1,000 and 5,000 francs MG.

Exchange rates (December 1981): 1 franc MG = 2 French centimes;

£1 sterling = 545.6 francs MG; U.S. $1 = 283.65 francs MG.

1,000 francs MG = £1.833 = $3.525.

Note: Between December 1958 and August 1969 the value of the Malagasy franc was 3.6 milligrammes of gold, equal to 0.4051 U.S. cent (U.S. $1 = 246.853 Malagasy francs). Since January 1960 the Malagasy franc has been equivalent to 2 French centimes (1 French franc = 50 Malagasy francs). In August 1969 the Malagasy franc was devalued (in line with the French franc) to 3.2 milligrammes of gold, the exchange rate being 1 Malagasy franc = 0.3601 U.S. cent ($1 = 277.71 Malagasy francs) until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the official rate was 1 Malagasy franc = 0.3909 U.S. cent ($1 = 255.785 Malagasy francs). Since March 1973 the French authorities have ceased to maintain the franc-dollar rate within previously agreed margins. As a result, the value of the Malagasy franc has fluctuated on foreign exchange markets in line with the French franc. The average market rates (Malagasy francs per U.S. dollar) were: 252.2 in 1972; 222.7 in 1973; 240.5 in 1974; 214.3 in 1975; 239.0 in 1976; 245.7 in 1977; 225.6 in 1978; 212.7 in 1979; 211.3 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the central exchange rate between August 1969 and June 1972 was £1 = 666.503 Malagasy francs (1 Malagasy franc = 0.15004p).

THE CONSTITUTION

According to the Constitution endorsed by referendum on December 21st, 1975, Madagascar's institutions are as follows:

The President of the Republic, elected for seven years by universal suffrage;

The Supreme Revolutionary Council (SRC), "the guardian of the Malagasy Socialist Revolution". The President of the Republic is Chairman by automatic right of the SRC, of which he names two-thirds of the members. He chooses the other members from a list presented by the National People's Assembly;

The National People's Assembly, whose deputies are elected for five years by universal suffrage. It holds two ordinary sessions a year;

The Government, responsible to the President of the Republic, who names the Prime Minister and endorses the Premier's choice of Ministers. The Prime Minister is automatically a member of the SRC;

The Military Development Committee, a consultative organ whose endorsement is essential for any national defence programme or programme of social and economic development;

The Constitutional High Court, seven members, with a renewable five-year mandate.

For the purposes of local government the country is divided into about 11,000 fokontany (traditional village communities), 92 firaisam-pokontany (groups of villages, formerly sub-prefectures), 18 fi vondronam-pokontany (prefectures), and 6 faritany (provinces). Each unit is governed by an elected council whose members must belong to the FNDR.

The ideology of the state is socialist, as expressed in the Malagasy Socialist Revolutionary Charter.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

There are 1,035 km. of railway, including 884 km. of one metre gauge track. One line links Toamasina on the east coast with Antsirabe in the interior via Brichaville, Moramanga and Antananarivo, with a branch line from Moramanga to Vohidiala which divides to Lake Alaotra and Morarano to collect chromium ore. The other links Manakara on the south-east coast and Fianarantsoa, and studies have been completed for plans to join the lines between Fianarantsoa and Antsirabe.

Réseau National des Chemins de Fer: B.P. 259, Soarano, Antananarivo 101; f. 1909; Gen. Man. SAMUEL RAZANAMAPISA.

ROADS

In 1979 Madagascar had 8,679 km. of national highways, of which 4,526 km. were bitumen-surfaced. There were also 10,224 km. of secondary roads and 8,653 km. of tracks. A major four-year road improvement scheme, financed by the EEC and the International Development Association, began in 1979.

INLAND WATERWAYS

The Pangalanes Canal runs for 700 km. near the east coast from Toamasina to Farafangana. At the end of 1979 it was not navigable but repairs were being planned.

SHIPPING

There are 18 ports, the largest being at Toamasina, which handles about two-thirds of total traffic, and Mahajanga.

MALAWI

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Malawi lies in southern central Africa, with Zambia to the west, Mozambique to the south and east, and Tanzania to the north. Lake Malawi forms most of the eastern boundary. The climate is tropical, but much of the country is high enough to modify the heat. The official language is English, though Chichewa is being promoted as the basis for a "Malawi Language". Most Africans follow traditional beliefs. There are about 10 per cent Protestants and 10 per cent Roman Catholics, and there is a Muslim community among the Asians, as well as a Hindu minority. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has black, red and green horizontal stripes, with a rising sun in red on the black stripe. The capital is Lilongwe.

Recent History

Malawi was formerly the British protectorate of Nyasaland. In 1953 it was linked with two other British dependencies, Northern and Southern Rhodesia (now Zambia and Zimbabwe), to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. Elections in August 1961 gave the Malawi Congress Party (MCP), led by Dr. Hastings Kamuzu Banda, a majority on the Legislative Council. The MCP campaigned for independence and secession from the Federation. Dr. Banda became Prime Minister in February 1963 and the Federation was dissolved in December. Nyasaland became independent, as Malawi, in July 1964. Two years later the country became a republic, and a one-party state, with Dr. Banda as its first President. In 1967 Malawi created a major controversy amongst African states by officially recognizing the Republic of South Africa and this recognition has continued to draw much criticism from leaders of other African states. In 1971 Dr. Banda became Life President of Malawi and the first African head of state to visit South Africa. In 1976, however, Malawi recognized the communist-backed MPLA Government in Angola and has since refused to recognize the independence granted by South Africa to four of its "homelands".

Malawi, both economically and militarily, lies in the South African sphere of influence. In 1973 123,000 Malawians worked in South African mines. Recruitment was banned in 1974 and, although this measure was reversed in 1977, only 18,000 worked in South Africa by 1981. Malawi is a member of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) and hosted its November 1981 meeting. Despite this support for a strategy to reduce the dependence of southern African countries on South Africa, Dr. Banda supported neither Frelimo nor the Patriotic Front during their respective independence struggles in Mozambique and Zimbabwe.

Dr. Banda rules the country firmly and tolerates no political opposition. In March 1979 Dr. Banda openly admitted that the letter bomb which injured the exiled leader of the Socialist League of Malawi, Dr. Attati Mpakati, had been sent on his instructions. In 1980 two Cabinet members were dismissed for alleged breach of party discipline, and no political figure has been allowed to emerge as an obvious successor to the ageing Dr. Banda. In January 1982 the President extensively reshuffled his Cabinet, and reduced its size.

Elections were held in June 1978. Only members of the MCP were allowed to stand and all candidates were vetted by the President. Banda's cautious policy of liberalization, which began in 1977 with the release of nearly all political detainees (including several thousand Jehovah's Witnesses persecuted for refusing to join the MCP) and the invitation to foreign journalists to visit the country for the first time since 1973, continued when he allowed two or three candidates to stand in each constituency. This was in contrast to the elections of 1971 and 1976, when all candidates were elected unopposed. However, overseas press coverage of the elections provoked Banda to renew the ban on foreign journalists in August 1978.

Government

Malawi is a republic with an elected President whose term of office is normally five years, though Dr. Banda is now President for life. Executive power is vested in the President and legislative power in the unicameral National Assembly. The Assembly has 87 members elected for five years and up to 15 additional members nominated by the President. Cabinet Ministers, chosen by the President, are responsible to him. The country is divided into three Regions and 24 districts.

Defence

Malawi's defence forces numbered 5,000 men in July 1981. All services form part of the army. There is also a paramilitary force of 600 and a national police force totalling about 3,000 men.

Economic Affairs

Malawi has few natural resources, and agriculture, which employs 85 per cent of the working population, mostly at subsistence level, is the mainstay of the economy, accounting for 43 per cent of G.D.P. and 94 per cent of exports in 1979. The principal cash crops are tobacco, sugar and tea (which together accounted for 76 per cent of export receipts in 1980), cotton, groundnuts and maize. Agricultural production continues to grow steadily but economic performance remains dependent on fluctuating commodity prices. The real decline in wholesale prices for tea and tobacco from the peaks of 1977 restricted the growth in total export earnings. Exports grew from K176 million in 1977 to only K185 million in 1979 but, with a recovery in tobacco prices, increased to K239 million in 1980. There are four main rural development projects which, together with a number of smaller ones, cover about one-fifth of Malawi's land area. The biggest is the Lilongwe Land Development Programme, begun in 1968, which aims to transform over one million acres into an agricultural and social base for 500,000 people.

The economy is hampered by a consistently adverse balance of trade. The lack of mineral wealth is a severely limiting factor, although the manufacturing sector has made considerable progress since independence. In 1981 manufacturing contributed 12 per cent of G.D.P. and construction a further 5 per cent. Trade is mainly with the United Kingdom, South Africa and Zimbabwe, with the United Kingdom accounting for by far the largest share of exports.

Malawi's trade deficit of K29 million in 1977 was relatively low because of favourable commodity prices but, with these stagnated, transport problems, an upsurge in imports (particularly petroleum) and deterioration in the terms of trade, the deficit rose steeply to K135 million in 1979. In 1980 the deficit fell slightly to K119 million. The annual inflation rate rose from 8 per cent in 1977 to about 18 per cent in 1980. During the 1970s G.D.P. grew at an average annual rate of 6.6 per cent but, because of adverse economic conditions, growth was less than 1 per cent in 1980. A Five-Year Development Programme (1981/82-1985/86) aims to restore balance to the economy by increasing exports, decreasing imports and diversifying the economic base of the country by reducing the total dependence on tobacco, sugar and tea. Malawi relies heavily on foreign investment for development programmes, and secured a grant totalling K108 million from the United Kingdom for 1981-84.

Transport and Communications

There are 789 km. of railways in Malawi, which are linked at two points to those of Mozambique. A 227-km. line from Salima to Mchinji, on the Zambian border, via Lilongwe, built with Canadian assistance, was completed in 1980. In 1980 there were 10,772 km. of road, 2,745 km. of which were main roads. As well as Air Malawi there are air charter firms. After 1965 Blantyre became a focal point for regional air services in southern Africa. Construction of a new international airport at Lilongwe was completed in 1981.

Social Welfare

A social development agency, now part of the Ministry of Labour, was set up in 1958. Its work includes care and protection of young people, the destitute, and the physically handicapped, probation work, sport, community centres and women's clubs. In 1981 Malawi had 121 doctors out of a total of almost 6,000 medical personnel. In 1980 there was a total of 4,122 health institutions, of which 47 were hospitals, with 11,376 beds. The Ministries of Community Development and of Social Welfare, created in 1972, initiate and expand welfare projects. Hospitals and health facilities are to be extended under a 15-year plan compiled by the Minister of Health.

Education

In 1979/80 there were nearly 780,000 African children receiving primary education and nearly 16,500 receiving secondary education, provided in government and government-aided schools. The University of Malawi has over 1,600 students. Many students go to the United Kingdom and the U.S.A. In 1966 adult illiteracy averaged 77.9 per cent (males 66.2 per cent, females 87.7 per cent). In 1975 Malawi began a five-year education project to build 22 primary schools, 22 rural education centres and a teachers' training college.

Tourism

The country has a small but growing tourist industry. Big game, fine scenery and an excellent climate form the basis of the country's tourist potential. In 1980 47,216 tourists visited the country.

Public Holidays

1982: May 14th (Kamuzu Day, birthday of President Banda), July 6th (Republic Day), August 2nd (Bank Holiday), October 17th (Mothers' Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March 3rd (Martyrs' Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 tambala = 1 kwacha (K).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling ≈ 1.737 kwacha;

U.S. $1 ≈ 90.3 tambala.

100 tambala = 1 Malawi kwacha (K).

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10 and 20 tambala.

Notes: 50 tambala; 1, 5 and 10 kwacha.

100 Malawi kwacha = £57.58 = $110.76.

Note: The Malawi kwacha was introduced in February 1971, replacing the Malawi pound (at par with the pound sterling) at the rate of £1 = 2 kwacha. From November 1967 the exchange rate was £1 = U.S. $2.40, so the initial value of the kwacha was $1.20 ($1 = 83.33 tambala). This valuation remained in force until August 1971. The exchange rate was 1 kwacha = $1.303 ($1 = 76.75 tambala) from December 1971 to June 1972, when the kwacha began "floating" with the pound sterling. The fixed rate of £1 sterling = 2 kwacha remained effective until November 1973. From November 1973 to June 1975 the value of the kwacha was determined independently on the basis of movements of sterling and the U.S. dollar in exchange markets. Since June 1975 the kwacha has been valued in terms of the IMF Special Drawing Right (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies), with a mid-point rate of 1 SDR = 1.054 kwacha. The average exchange rate (kwacha per U.S. dollar) was: 0.802 in 1972; 0.819 in 1973; 0.841 in 1974; 0.864 in 1975; 0.913 in 1976; 0.903 in 1977; 0.844 in 1978; 0.817 in 1979; 0.812 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new Constitution was introduced in 1966. Malawi is a one-party state with a presidential form of government.

Fundamental Rights

Fundamental rights are guaranteed by the Constitution.

The President

The President is both Head of State and Head of Government. He has the right to participate in parliamentary debates and may refuse his assent to any Bill; if the Bill is passed again within six months he must either assent or dissolve Parliament and thus submit himself to an election. However, in 1971 Dr. H. Kamuzu Banda was appointed President for life. The Chief Justice is appointed by the President, as are senior civil servants and members of the armed forces. The President may proclaim a state of emergency. On the death of a President, the functions of that office will be performed by a Presidential Council comprising the Secretary-General of the Malawi Congress Party, as Chairman, and two Cabinet Ministers.

Parliament

There is a Parliament, consisting of the President and the National Assembly. The National Assembly has 87 elected members and an unlimited number of members nominated by the President. A Speaker is appointed from among the ordinary members of the Assembly. The Assembly may change the Constitution by a two-thirds majority on the second and third readings. All members must belong to the Malawi Congress Party. The parliamentary term is normally five years. The President has power to prorogue or dissolve Parliament.

Executive Powers

Executive power is exercised by the President acting as Prime Minister. Ministers are responsible to the President.

THE GOVERNMENT

Life President, Minister of External Affairs, Justice, Works and Supplies and Agriculture: Dr. HASTINGS KAMUZU BANDA.

Minister without Portfolio: DICK TENNYSON MATENJE.

Minister of Labour: WADSON BINI DELEZA.

Minister of Central Region: AARON GADAMA.

Minister of Southern Region: EDWARD CHITSULO ISAAC BWANALI.

Minister of Transport and Communications: BAKILI MALUZI.

Minister of Local Government: LOUIS CHIMANGO.

Minister of Health: JOHN TWAIBU SANGALA.

Minister of Finance: LYNALD CHAZIYA PHIRI.

Minister of Education and Culture: STEPHEN HARA.

Minister of Forestry and Natural Resources: STANDFORD DEMBA.

Minister of Trade and Industry: HARRISON KAYIRA.

LEGISLATURE

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Speaker: NELSON P. W. KHONJE.

The Assembly has 87 elected members, serving a five-year term, and the President is empowered to appoint an unlimited number of nominated members. At the 1971 and 1976 elections the candidates of the Malawi Congress Party were elected unopposed in all constituencies, although in the election of 1978 most seats were contested.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Malawi Congress Party (MCP): Lilongwe; f. 1959; succeeded the Nyasaland African Congress; all adults are supposed to join the party; Life Pres. Dr. HASTINGS KAMUZU BANDA; Sec.-Gen. and Admin. Sec. DICK TENNYSON MATENJE.

There are three small groups in exile who aim to overthrow President Banda:

Congress for the Second Republic: Dar es Salaam, Tanzania; led by former Minister of External Affairs KANYAMA CHIUME.

Malawi Freedom Movement (MAFREMO): Dar es Salaam, Tanzania; left-wing; led by former Cabinet Minister ORTON CHIRWA (arrested Dec. 1981); claims wide support inside Malawi.

Socialist League of Malawi (LESOMA): Salisbury, Zimbabwe; led by Dr. ATTATI MPAKATI; claims support from Cuba and the U.S.S.R.; People's Liberation Army of Malawi formed in 1980 as military wing.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Courts administering justice are the Supreme Court of Appeal, High Court, Magistrates' Courts and Traditional Courts.

The High Court consists of the Chief Justice and three Puisne Judges. The High Court has unlimited jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters. Traditional Courts established under the Laws of Malawi exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over cases and charges involving Africans and, in other cases, non-Africans. Appeals lie to the District Traditional Appeal Courts and then to the National Appeal Court. Regional Traditional Courts are criminal courts of first instance and have no appellate jurisdiction. They hear only cases involving Africans, including cases of homicide and treason. Appeals from Regional Traditional Courts lie as of right to the National Traditional Appeal Court. Appeals from the High Court go to the Supreme Court of Appeal in Blantyre.

MALAYSIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The federation of Malaysia consists of the 11 States of Peninsular Malaysia in the southern part of the Kra peninsula, with Thailand to the north and the island of Singapore to the south, and the States of Sabah and Sarawak on the north of the island of Kalimantan (Borneo), bordering Indonesia. The climate is tropical, with uniformly high temperatures and rain in all seasons. The official language is Bahasa Malaysia, based on Malay, but English is widely used. Islam is the established religion, practised by all Malays; most of the Chinese community follow Buddhism, Confucianism and Daoism; the Indians are predominantly Hindu; there is a minority of Christians among all races, and animism is practised, particularly in Sabah and Sarawak. Malaysia's national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has 14 horizontal stripes, alternating red and white, with a blue canton containing a yellow crescent and star. The capital is Kuala Lumpur.

Recent History

The 11 states of Malaya, under British protection, were united as the Malayan Union in April 1946 and became the Federation of Malaya in February 1948. An armed communist revolt broke out in 1948 and was not completely suppressed until 1960. Malaya became independent, within the Commonwealth, on August 31st, 1957.

Malaysia was established on September 16th, 1963, through the union of the independent Federation of Malaya (renamed the States of Malaya), the internally self-governing state of Singapore, and the former British colonies of Sarawak and Sabah (North Borneo). Singapore left the federation in August 1965. The States of Malaya were designated West Malaysia in 1966 and later styled Peninsular Malaysia. Malaysia is a member of the Colombo Plan and the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

The general elections held in 1969 were followed by serious inter-communal rioting, engendered by Malay resentment of the economic dominance of the Chinese community and certain pro-Chinese electoral results. The rioting precipitated the resignation, in September 1970, of Tunku Abdul Rahman, Prime Minister since independence. The new Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, widened the Government coalition, dominated by the United Malay National Organization (UMNO), to create a ten-party National Front, which absorbed most of the former opposition parties and took measures to reduce racial tension. In January 1976 the Prime Minister died and was succeeded by the Deputy Prime Minister, Dato Hussein bin Onn.

In 1975 political stability was threatened by the resurgence of the communist guerrilla movement in Peninsular Malaysia. A number of emergency regulations were introduced but the Government was unable to prevent continuing terrorist attacks between 1976 and 1978. However, with Thai military co-operation in border region operations, communist insurgency has declined, although it remains a potential threat to the stability of the country.

In October 1977 the expulsion of the Chief Minister of Kelantan from the dominant Pan-Malaya Islamic Party (PMIP) resulted in violent political disturbances in the State and the declaration of a state of emergency by the Federal Government. Direct rule was imposed and the PMIP was expelled from the National Front in December. In the federal and state elections of July 1978 Hussein Onn consolidated the position of the National Front, while the PMIP, in opposition, suffered a serious setback. In September 1978 Hussein was confined as President of UMNO. In July 1981 Hussein was succeeded by Datuk Seri Dr. Matahir bin Mohamad, Deputy Prime Minister since 1976. At the end of that month the Government announced the release of 21 political prisoners, including a former Deputy Prime Minister and Opposition politicians.

In 1978, following the Federal Government's rejection of proposals for a Chinese university, racial and religious tensions re-emerged and continued in 1979. In October 1980 these tensions resurfaced in a suicide raid by Muslim fanatics on a local police station in Johore State.

Since 1971 the Government has moved away from its previous pro-Western, anti-Communist stance in international affairs, establishing diplomatic relations with its Communist neighbours, although it continues to oppose Viet-Nam's presence in Kampuchea. Malaysia has had to deal with a constant stream of refugees from Indochina, particularly Viet-Nam and throughout 1978 and 1979 the Government maintained a strong line against accepting new arrivals. However, in 1980 refugee arrivals rose to over 2,000 in the month of November from a monthly rate of under 800 earlier in the year.

In October 1981 the Prime Minister announced that all government and commercial transactions with the U.K. were to be transferred to his office for final approval. A leading factor behind the move was thought to be the change in London Stock Exchange regulations in September of that year.

Government

Malaysia is a federation of 13 states. The capital, Kuala Lumpur, is a separate Federal Territory. The Supreme Head of Malaysia is a monarch, elected for a five-year term from the hereditary Rulers of nine of the states. The monarch acts on the advice of Parliament and a Cabinet. Parliament consists of the Dewan Negara (Senate) and the Dewan Rakyat (House of Representatives). The Senate has 58 members, including 32 appointed by the Head of State and 26 elected by State Legislative Assemblies (two from each). The House of Representatives consists of 154 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, 114 from Peninsular Malaysia, 24 from Sarawak and 16 from Sabah. The Head of State appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 102,000: army 90,000, navy 6,000 and air force 6,000. Paramilitary forces comprised 19,000 Police Field Force and 350,000 People's Volunteer Corps. The Five-Power Defence Arrangement for joint consultations between Malaysia New Zealand, Australia and the United Kingdom established a token Commonwealth force in Malaysia. Estimated defence spending for 1981 totalled U.S. $2,250 million.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, forestry, hunting and fishing employ some 41 per cent of the economically active population. The plantation crops, rubber and oil palm, are the most important. Malaysia is the world's leading producer of natural rubber, and output reached 1,552,200 metric tons in 1980. Petroleum was the largest single source of government revenue, accounting for 23.7 per cent of export income in 1980. Earnings from palm oil and palm kernels amounted to M$2,902 million, 10.3 per cent of total export earnings. Malaysia normally produces about 86 per cent of its rice requirements, and in 1980 production totalled 1,413,600 metric tons. Cocoa is becoming increasingly important, with an annual export growth rate of 17 per cent between 1973 and 1978, although it remains vulnerable to fluctuating world demand. Pepper is one of Sarawak's major exports, but in recent years production has been hampered by plant disease.

Logs and timber were Malaysia's third largest source of foreign exchange in 1980. Exports rose from M$2,466 million in 1978 to M$3,974 million in 1980, totalling about 14 per cent of export earnings.

Malaysia is the world's major producer of tin, which is mined exclusively in Peninsular Malaysia. Owing to high world prices, exports of tin metal increased considerably in value to reach M$2,200 million in 1979, and in 1980, when fears of a damaging drop in price did not materialize, export earnings reached M$2,506 million. With the discovery of offshore petroleum reserves, Malaysia's production of crude petroleum has risen to an average annual rate of over 30 per cent over the last decade, and the value of petroleum exports rose from M$861 million in 1975 to M$4,209.9 million in 1979 and M$6,687 million in 1980. Production of crude petroleum declined in 1980 due to the Government's oil conservation policy. Other mineral resources include bauxite, copper, iron ore and gold.

Manufacturing is playing an increasingly important role in the economy, accounting for 21 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. The processing of locally produced raw materials predominates. Other activities include the manufacture of textiles, electronic equipment, chemicals and machinery. Malaysia's largest industrial project to date is a U.S. $500 million multi-faceted development scheme in Kedah. Another major scheme is a natural gas liquefaction plant at Bintulu in Sarawak, to be completed in 1982.

In 1980 Malaysia's balance of trade position weakened, with a total trade surplus of only M$4,663 million, compared to M$7,058 million in 1979. Exports, totalling M$28,201 million in 1980, experienced slower growth due to weakening commodity prices, lower foreign demand and reduced volume of production. Imports, however, increased to M$23,538 million. The federal budget is normally in surplus but in 1980 Malaysia faced its first current account balance of payments deficit in five years; the budgetary deficit was estimated at M$8,100 million.

G.D.P. growth increased from 7.6 per cent in 1978 to 8.5 per cent in 1979, but fell to an estimated 8 per cent in 1980. Unemployment was reduced from 7 per cent in 1975 to 5.3 per cent in 1980. The Fourth Malaysia Plan (1981-85) aims to achieve an annual real growth rate of 7.6 per cent and to keep domestic inflation between 6 and 7 per cent. A fundamental part of the Government's New Economic Policy, a 20-year programme begun in 1969, is the attempt to increase ethnic Malay participation in key economic sectors, to reach 30 per cent of ownership of limited companies by 1990.

Transport and Communications

Communications within Peninsular Malaysia are excellent and there are frequent services by air and sea between Peninsular Malaysia and Sarawak and Sabah. Malaysia's road system is extensive and in 1980 covered an estimated total distance of 29,410 km. A plan to extend the road network in Sabah was launched in 1978. The state-owned Malayan Railway had a total length of 1,666 km, in 1980. The country has a network of airfields and five major international airports.

Social Welfare

Social welfare comes under the two Malaysian Ministries of Health and of Welfare Services. Employers and employees contribute to the Employees' Provident Fund for retirement benefits. The independent Social Welfare Lotteries Board contributes large sums to welfare schemes. Government-sponsored social work among the aged and disabled is supported by many voluntary societies. Under the Fourth Malaysia Plan (1981-85), an estimated M$6,388 million is to be allocated to social services.

Education

Total school enrolment at government-assisted schools in 1981 was 3,152,194. In 1981 nearly 96 per cent of the 6 to 11 age group in Peninsular Malaysia were enrolled at primary schools. Education between the ages of 6 and 15 is free and compulsory in Peninsular Malaysia. Sabah and Sarawak, although under the Federal Ministry of Education, enjoy some local autonomy over education. There were five universities with 26,287 students in 1980.

Tourism

Malaysia has a fast-growing tourist industry, the cultures of the many ethnic groups present being a particular attraction. Over 1.4 million tourists visited Malaysia in 1979 and foreign exchange earnings from tourism were U.S. $246 million.

Public Holidays

Each State has its own public holidays, and the following federal holidays are also observed:

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 8th (Vesak Day)*, June 2nd (Official Birthday of H.M. the Yang di-Pertuan Agong), July 23rd, 24th (Hari Raya Puasa), August 31st (National Day), September 28th (Hari Raya Haji), November 14th (Deepavali), December 25th (Christmas Day), December 28th (Mouloud, Prophet Muhammad's Birthday).

1983: January/February† (Chinese New Year).

* Except Sabah.

† From the 1st-3rd day of the first moon of the Lunar Calendar.

Weights and Measures

In 1972 a 10-year programme of conversion from the imperial system to the metric system began. There is also a local system of weights and measures:

1 cupak = 1 quart (1.1365 litres)
 1 gantang = 1 gallon (4.5461 litres)
 1 tahlil = 1½ ounces (37.8 grammes)

16 tahils = 1 kati = 1½ lb. (604.8 grammes)

100 katis = 1 picul = 133½ lb. (60.48 kg.)
 40 piculs = 1 koyan = 5,333½ lb. (2,419.2 kg.)

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 ringgit or Malaysian dollar (M$).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = M$4.31;
 U.S. $1 = M$2.24.

FINANCE

(Malaysia)

100 sen = 1 ringgit or Malaysian dollar (M$).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 sen.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 50, 100 and 1,000 ringgits.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = M$4.31; U.S. $1 = M$2.24.

M$100 = £23.22 = U.S. $44.68.

Note: The Malaysian dollar was introduced in June 1967, replacing (at par) the Malayan dollar. From September 1949 the Malayan dollar was valued at 2s. 4d. sterling (£1 = M$8.5714) or 32.667 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = M$3.0612). This valuation in terms of U.S. currency remained in effect until August 1971. Between December 1971 and February 1973 the Malaysian dollar was valued at 35.467 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = M$2.8195). From February to June 1973 the Malaysian dollar's value was 39.407 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = M$2.5376). In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = M$7.347 from November 1967 to June 1972. The Malaysian dollar was interchangeable with the Singapore and Brunei dollars until May 1973. Since June 1973 the Malaysian dollar has been allowed to "float". From September 1975 the Malaysian dollar's link with the U.S. dollar was ended and its value determined by changes in a weighted "basket" of currencies of the country's main trading partners. In June 1976 the Malaysian dollar was officially renamed the ringgit. The average market exchange rate (ringgits per U.S. dollar), was: 2.443 in 1973; 2.407 in 1974; 2.402 in 1975; 2.542 in 1976; 2.461 in 1977; 2.316 in 1978; 2.188 in 1979; 2.177 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated August 31st, 1957, subsequently amended)

Supreme Head of State

The Yang di-Pertuan Agong (King or Supreme Sovereign) is the Supreme Head of Malaysia.

Every act of government flows from his authority although he acts on the advice of Parliament and the Cabinet. The appointment of a Prime Minister lies within his discretion, and he has the right to refuse to dissolve Parliament even against the advice of the Prime Minister. He appoints the Judges of the Federal Court and the High Courts on the advice of the Prime Minister. He is the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces. The Yang di-Pertuan Agong is elected by the Conference of Rulers, and to qualify for election he must be one of the nine Rulers. He holds office for five years or until his earlier resignation or death. Election is by secret ballot on each Ruler in turn, starting with the Ruler next in precedence after the late or former Yang di-Pertuan Agong. The first Ruler to obtain not fewer than five votes is declared elected. A Deputy Supreme Head of State (the Timbalan Yang di-Pertuan Agong) is elected by a similar process. On election the Yang di-Pertuan Agong relinquishes, for his tenure of office, all his functions as Ruler of his own State and may appoint a Regent. The Timbalan Yang di-Pertuan Agong exercises no powers in the ordinary course, but is immediately available to fill the post of Yang di-Pertuan Agong and carry out his functions in the latter's absence or disability. In the event of the Yang di-Pertuan Agong's death or resignation he takes over the exercise of sovereignty until the Conference of Rulers has elected a successor.

Conference of Rulers

The Conference of Rulers consists of the Rulers and the heads of the other States. Its prime duty is the election by the Rulers only of the Yang di-Pertuan Agong and his deputy. The Conference must be consulted in the appointment of judges, the Auditor-General, the Election Commission and the Services Commissions. It must also be consulted and concur in the alteration of State boundaries, the extension to the federation as a whole, of Islamic religious acts and observances, and in any bill to amend the Constitution. Consultation is mandatory in matters affecting public policy or the special position of the Malays and natives of Sabah and Sarawak. The Conference also considers matters affecting the rights, prerogatives and privileges of the Rulers themselves.

Federal Parliament

Parliament has two Houses—the Dewan Negara (Senate) and the Dewan Rakyat (House of Representatives). The Senate has a membership of 58, made up of 26 elected and 32 appointed members. Each State Legislature, acting as an electoral college, elects two Senators; these may be members of the State Legislative Assembly or otherwise. The Yang di-Pertuan Agong appoints the other 32 members of the Senate. Members of the Senate must be at least 30 years old. The Senate elects a President and a Deputy President from among its members. It may initiate legislation, but all money bills must be introduced in the first instance in the House of Representatives. All bills must be passed by both Houses of Parliament before being presented to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong for the Royal Assent in order to become law. A bill originating in the Senate cannot receive Royal Assent until it has been agreed to by the House of Representatives, but the Senate has delaying powers only over a bill originating from and approved by the House of Representatives. Senators serve for a period of six years, but the Senate is not subject to dissolution. Parliament can by statute increase the number of Senators elected from each State to three. The House of Representatives consists of 154 elected members. Of these, 114 are from Peninsular Malaysia, 24 from Sarawak and 16 from Sabah. Members are returned from single-member constituencies on the basis of universal adult franchise. The life of the House of Representatives is limited to five years, after which time a fresh general election must be held. The Yang di-Pertuan Agong may dissolve Parliament before then if the Prime Minister so advises.

The Cabinet

The Yang di-Pertuan Agong appoints a Cabinet to advise him in the exercise of his functions, consisting of the Prime Minister and an unspecified number of Ministers who must all be members of Parliament. The Prime Minister must be a citizen born in Malaysia and a member of the House of Representatives who, in the opinion of the Yang di-Pertuan Agong, commands the confidence of that House. Ministers are appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister. A number of Deputy Ministers (who are not members of the Cabinet) are also appointed from among Members of Parliament. The Cabinet meets regularly under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister to formulate policy.

Public Services

The Public Services, civilian and military, are non-political and owe their loyalty not to the party in power but to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong and the Rulers. They serve whichever government may be in power, irrespective of the latter's political affiliation. To ensure the impartiality of the service, and to protect it from political interference, a number of Services Commissions are established under the Constitution to select and appoint officers, to place them on the pensionable establishment, to decide as to promotion, and to maintain discipline.

The States

The heads of nine of the thirteen States are hereditary Rulers. The Ruler of Perlis has the title of Raja and that of Negri Sembilan, Yang di-Pertuan Besar. The rest of the Rulers are Sultans. The heads of the States of Malacca, Penang, Sabah and Sarawak are each designated Yang di-Pertua Negeri and do not participate in the election of the Yang di-Pertuan Agong. Each of the 13 States has its own written Constitution, and a single Legislative Assembly. Every State Legislature has powers to legislate on matters not reserved for the Federal Parliament. Each State Legislative Assembly has the right to order its own procedure, and the members enjoy parliamentary privilege. All members of the Legislative Assemblies are directly elected from single-member constituencies. The head of the State acts on the advice of the State Government, which advice is tendered by the State Executive Council or Cabinet in precisely the same manner as the Federal Cabinet tenders advice to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong.

The Legislative authority of the State is vested in the head of the State in the State Legislative Assembly. The executive authority of the State is vested in the head of the State but executive functions may be conferred on other persons by law. Every State has an Executive Council or Cabinet to advise the head of the State, headed by a Chief Minister (in Malacca, Penang, Sabah and Sarawak) or Menteri Besar (in other States), and collectively responsible to the State legislature. Each State in Peninsular Malaysia is divided into administrative districts under a District Officer. Sabah is divided into four residencies: West Coast, Interior, Sandakan and Tawau with headquarters at Kota Kinabalu, Keningau, Sandakan and Tawau respectively. The island of Labuan is administered by a District Officer responsible direct to the State Secretary in Kota Kinabalu. Sarawak is divided into five Divisions, each in charge of a Resident—the First Division, with headquarters at Kuching; the Second Division, with headquarters at Simanggang; the Third Division, with headquarters at Sibu; the Fourth Division, with headquarters at Miri; the Fifth Division, with headquarters at Limbang.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The two High Courts, one in Peninsular Malaysia and the other in Sabah and Sarawak, have original, appellate and revisional jurisdiction as the federal law provides. Above these two High Courts is a Federal Court which has, to the exclusion of any other court, jurisdiction in any dispute between States or between the Federation and any State; and has special jurisdiction as to the interpretation of the Constitution. There is also a right of appeal from the High Courts to the Federal Court and limited right of appeal from the Federal Court to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong who may refer appeals in certain civil matters to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the United Kingdom. The High Courts each consist of the Chief Justice and a number of Judges. The Federal Court consists of the Lord President together with the two Chief Justices of the High Courts and six Federal Judges. The Lord President and Judges of the Federal Court, and the Chief Justices and Judges of the High Courts, are appointed by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong on the advice of the Prime Minister, after consulting the Conference of Rulers.

The Sessions Courts, which are situated in the principal urban and rural centres, are presided over by a President, who is a member of the Federation Legal and Judicial Service and is a qualified barrister or a Bachelor of Law from any of the recognized universities. Their criminal jurisdiction covers the less serious and indictable offences, excluding those which carry penalties of death or life imprisonment. Civil cases are heard without a jury. Civil jurisdiction of a President's Sessions Court is up to M$25,000. The Presidents are appointed by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong.

The Magistrates' Courts are also found in the main urban and rural centres and have both civil and criminal jurisdiction, although of a more restricted nature than that of the Sessions Courts. The Magistrates consist of officers from either the Federation Legal and Judicial Service or are seconded from the administration to the Judicial Department for varying periods up to three years. They are appointed by the heads of the States in which they officiate on the recommendation of the Chief Justice.

Lord President of the Federal Court of Malaysia: Hon. Mr. Justice Tun MOHAMED SUFFIAN BIN HASHIM, S.S.M., D.I.M.P.; J.M.N. (Brunei), P.J.K., M.A., LL.B.

Chief Justice of the High Court in Peninsular Malaysia: Hon. Mr. Justice Tan Sri RAJA AZLAN SHAH.

Chief Justice of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak: Hon. Mr. Justice Tan Sri Datuk LEE HUN HOE.

RELIGION

Islam is the established religion but freedom of religious practice is guaranteed. All Malays are Muslims. A small minority of Chinese are Christians but most Chinese follow Buddhism, Confucianism or Daoism. Of the Indian community, about 70 per cent are Hindu, 20 per cent Muslim, 5 per cent Christian and 2 per cent Sikh. In Sabah and Sarawak there are many animists.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

PENINSULAR MALAYSIA

- Malayan Railway Administration: P.O.B. 1, Kuala Lumpur; f. 1885; Gen. Man. Dato ISHAK BIN TADIN.

The main line, 787 km. long, follows the west coast and extends from Singapore in the south to Butterworth (opposite Penang Island) to the north.

From Bukit Mertajam, close to Butterworth, the line branches off to the Thai border at Padang Besar where connection is made with the State Railway of Thailand.

The East Coast Line, 526 km. long, runs from Gemas to Tumpat (near Kota Bahru). A 21-km. branch line from Pasir Mas, which is 27 km. south of Tumpat, connects with the State Railway of Thailand at the border station of Sungei Golok.

Branch lines serve railway-operated ports at Port Dickson and Telok Anson as well as Port Kelang and Jurong (Singapore).

Express Rakyat rail services are operated between Butterworth and Singapore in addition to the normal express services between Butterworth, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore. In March 1980 the Express K.M.T. began operating between Singapore and Kuala Lumpur.

SABAH

Sabah State Railways: Kota Kinabalu; the length of the railway was 140 km. in 1979. The line is of metre gauge and runs from Kota Kinabalu to Tenom serving part of the west coast and the interior; diesel trains are used; Gen. Man. DANIEL WONG THIEN SUNG (acting).

MALDIVES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Maldives, lying about 675 km. (420 miles) south-west of Sri Lanka, consists of 1,196 islands (203 of which are inhabited) in the Indian Ocean. The climate is hot and humid. The average temperature is 27°C (80°F), with little daily or seasonal variation. The language, Dhivehi, is related to Sinhala. Islam is the state religion. The flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, bearing a green rectangle in the centre, charged with a white crescent. The capital is Malé.

Recent History

Maldives, called the Maldive Islands until 1969, formerly had an elected Sultan as head of state. The islands were placed under British protection, with internal self-government, in 1887. They became a republic in January 1953 but the sultanate was restored in February 1954. Maldives became fully independent, outside the Commonwealth, on July 26th, 1965. Following a referendum, the country became a republic again in November 1968, with Ibrahim Nasir, Prime Minister since 1954, as President. The islands have been a member of the Colombo Plan since 1963, of the UN since 1965 and the IMF and the World Bank since 1978. Maldives is a member of 22 international organizations and by 1981 had diplomatic relations with 53 countries.

In 1956 the Maldivian and United Kingdom Governments agreed to the establishment of a Royal Air Force staging post on Gan, an island in the southernmost atoll, Addu. In 1975 the British Government's decision to close the base and evacuate British forces created a large commercial and military gap. In October 1977 President Nasir rejected a U.S. $1 million offer from the U.S.S.R. to lease the former base on Gan, saying that he would not lease the island for military purposes, nor lease it to a superpower. In 1981 the President announced plans to set up an international business complex on Gan. Approximately £1.5 million would be needed to make the airport on Gan fully operational.

In March 1975 President Nasir dismissed the Prime Minister, Ahmed Zaki, and the post of Prime Minister was abolished. Unexpectedly, President Nasir announced that he would not stand for re-election at the end of his second term in 1978. Maumoon Abdul Gayoom, Minister of Transport under Nasir, succeeded him as President in November 1978. Gayoom's main priority was to be the development of the poor rural regions, and in foreign affairs the existing policy of non-alignment would continue. Maldives seeks to maintain and develop strong and varied foreign relations in order to obtain more aid and to ensure a peaceful Indian Ocean area.

Nasir was wanted in Malé to answer charges of mis-appropriating government funds and in 1980 President Gayoom confirmed an attempted coup against the Government and implicated Nasir in the alleged plot. In November it was announced that Nasir was to stand trial in his absence on these and other charges. In April 1981 Ahmed Naseem, former Deputy Fisheries Minister and brother-in-law of Nasir, was sentenced to life imprisonment for plotting to overthrow the President. Nasir himself flatly denied any involvement in the coup and attempts to extradite him from Singapore have been unsuccessful.

Government

Legislative power is held by the unicameral Citizens' Council (Majilis), with 48 members, including 40 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage (two by the National Capital Island and two from each of the 19 atolls) and eight appointed by the President. Executive power is vested in the President, elected by popular vote (on nomination by the Majilis) for five years. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet, responsible to the Majilis. The country has 20 administrative districts: the capital is under direct central administration and the 19 atolls are each under an atoll chief appointed by the President, under the general guidance of the Minister of Provincial Affairs.

Economic Affairs

The bulk of the population live on tiny islands in scattered atolls and, in the main, outside a money economy, subsisting by fishing and collecting coconuts. A large proportion of the coconut crop is regularly destroyed by rats and an eradication programme is under way. Malé has traditionally maintained a higher standard of living by levying an indirect tax on fish and coconuts. Arable land is minimal and, while small amounts of coconuts, millet, sorghum, maize and yams are grown, virtually all the main food staples have to be imported.

The fishing industry is the mainstay of the economy and 90 per cent of the catch was traditionally exported to Sri Lanka in dried form known as "Maldivian Fish". From 1972, however, Sri Lanka gradually reduced its quota and by 1978 had ceased importing altogether. This caused the fisheries sector to change from dried fish to wet fish production and to invite foreign companies to buy fresh fish for freezing and export. In 1979 fish exports to Sri Lanka were resumed, though at a much reduced level. In 1978 the Maldivian Nippon Corporation opened a cannery outside Malé.

The second largest commercial industry is shipping, which began in 1958. The Government is trying to develop the industry and in June 1981 the ADB approved a U.S. $1 million loan to help provide the country's first reliable shipping service between Malé and the atolls.

Tourism is another industry which provides considerable foreign exchange. The significant development in tourism since 1972 has been financed by a local private enterprise.

In 1981 the country's first central bank, the Maldivian Monetary Authority was set up and the currency was changed from rupees to rufiyaa. Plans were also finalized for the establishment of Maldives' first commercial bank, a joint venture between the Government and the International Finance and Investment Company of Bangladesh.

Transport and Communications

Frequent shipping services link Maldives with Sri Lanka, India and Singapore. Smaller vessels provide services between the islands on an irregular basis. Maldives International Airlines, the national carrier, operates daily flights to Colombo in Sri Lanka and three flights per week to Trivandrum in southern India. The airport on Hululé island has been expanded and improved to international standard with financial assistance from Kuwait, Abu Dhabi, Saudi Arabia and OPEC and, as Malé International Airport, was opened in November 1981. A domestic service, run by Air Maldives, operates two flights a week between Malé and Gan.

Social Welfare

There is one hospital in Malé, with 53 beds, and two regional hospitals are being built in the north and south. The Government has launched a national public health education programme.

Education

There are three types of formal education: traditional Koranic schools (Makthab), Dhivehi-medium primary schools (Madhrasa) and English-medium primary and secondary schools. The latter are the only ones equipped to teach a standard curriculum. In 1979 there were 78 schools, with 33,054 pupils, and it was estimated that only 9 per cent of the school-age population attended school.

The first school outside Malé was opened in 1978. In 1975, with the assistance of the UNDP and the ILO, a full-time vocational training centre was opened in Malé, and in 1979 the Science Education Centre was opened with the help of UNICEF, UNESCO and the UNDP.

Tourism

The tourist industry brings considerable foreign exchange to Maldives, with its white sandy beaches and multi-coloured coral formations. By 1980 twenty-seven islands had been developed for tourists, with a capacity of 1,748 beds. The number of foreign visitors rose from 1,799 in 1972/73 to over 52,000 in 1981.

Public Holidays

1982: July 23rd (Id-ul-Fitr), July 26th (Independence Day), September 29th (Id-ul-Adha), October 19th (Muslim New Year), November 11th (Republic Day), December 28th (Birth of Muhammad).

1983: January 7th (National Day).

MALI

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Mali is a land-locked state in West Africa, with Algeria to the north, Mauritania and Senegal to the west, Guinea and the Ivory Coast to the south and Upper Volta and Niger to the east. The climate is hot and dry, with temperatures ranging from 24° to 32°C (75°–90°F) and increasing northward into the Sahara Desert. The official language is French but a number of other languages, including Bambara, Fulfulde, Sonrai, Tamashek, Soninke and Dogon, are widely spoken. About 65 per cent of the population are Muslims and more than 30 per cent follow traditional beliefs, the remainder being Christians. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is a vertical tricolour of green, gold and red. The capital is Bamako.

Recent History

Mali was formerly French Sudan, a part of French West Africa. In April 1959 it merged with Senegal to form the Federation of Mali, which became independent in June 1960. Senegal seceded two months later and the remnant of the Federation was proclaimed the Republic of Mali in September 1960. The first President, Modibo Keita, adopted authoritarian socialist policies and broke away from the French political and financial bloc. Despite communist aid, rapid inflation forced Keita to return to the Franc Zone in 1967, at the price of a 50 per cent currency devaluation. The elected National Assembly was dissolved in January 1968. Keita was overthrown in November 1968 by a group of junior army officers, who ruled as the Military Committee of National Liberation (CMLN). The constitution was abrogated and political parties banned.

Lieutenant (later Brig.-Gen.) Moussa Traoré emerged as the dominant figure in the new regime, with the posts of Head of State and President of the CMLN, and in September 1969 replaced Capt. Yoro Diakité as President of the Government. Diakité died in prison in 1973. The regime maintained military rule and quashed opposition, promising civilian rule when the economic problems created by the drought in the Sahel had been overcome and new political institutions had been created.

Mass support for President Traoré's plan for a return to civilian rule by June 1979 was demonstrated in a referendum in June 1974. The formation of a new ruling party, the Union Démocratique du Peuple Malien (UDPM), was announced in September 1976. There was persistent opposition from politicians active before the 1968 coup who were barred from political activity, and from those, particularly students, who would prefer a multi-party democracy. There was also reported to be resistance to civilian rule from within the army. In February 1978 the four members of the CMLN most closely associated with the repressive machinery of military rule and 32 senior members of the military and police were arrested. In June 1980 two former ministers were sentenced to death on corruption charges. President Traoré's success against these "hardliners" removed differences among the military as an obstacle to the return of civilian rule, and in May 1978 six civilians were appointed to the Council of Ministers, bringing its number to 15, including nine civilians. The new party was officially constituted in March 1979. In the presidential and legislative elections on June 19th, President Traoré was almost unanimously re-elected for a five-year term. Mali is now under "constitutional" rule, with the role of the military remaining significant in the administrative élite.

In November 1979 students in secondary and higher education went on strike over an examination and grants dispute, and the Government closed the institutions. Following talks between students and authorities in December, schools were reopened in January 1980. The Students' Union was dissolved because it refused to join the youth section of the UDPM; in its place, committees of the Party's youth movement, the Union Démocratique de la Jeunesse Malienne (UDJM), were set up in educational establishments. The death in custody of the student union leader in March resulted in further violent protests by students. Classes resumed when the President announced the release of several hundred detained students, but there were again difficulties later in the year when primary school teachers came out on strike. All educational establishments were closed for the 1980/81 academic year.

In December 1980 a plot to overthrow the Government was discovered and several junior police officers were said to have been arrested. The first extraordinary congress of the UDPM, held in February 1981, allowed for the liberalization of local agricultural commerce, ending the monopoly of the agricultural marketing board, and began the process of reforming the state companies.

Government

After the coup of 1968, the Military Committee of National Liberation (CMLN) ruled by decree with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers. Under the new Constitution, approved by referendum in June 1974 and adopted in June 1979, the main institutions of government are the President and the National Assembly of 82 members, elected by universal suffrage for a term of four years from a list of candidates chosen by the single political party, the Union Démocratique du Peuple Malien (UDPM). The Constitution was amended in October 1981, reducing the term of office of the National Assembly to three years. President Traoré is establishing local branches of the party, which was created in 1976. Mali has eight administrative regions, and a district government in Bamako.

Defence

The army numbered 4,600 in July 1981, including a paratroop company. There are also three patrol boats on the River Niger, and 300 men in the Soviet-equipped air force. The gendarmerie numbers 5,000.

Economic Affairs

Mali is poor in natural resources. A large part of the country lies in the Sahara Desert and is capable of supporting only a sparse nomadic population dependent on its flocks and herds. Almost 90 per cent of the working population are engaged in agriculture. The severe drought of 1968-74 drastically reduced livestock levels. There was some improvement between 1976 and 1978, but by 1980 herds were again being affected by drought conditions and Mali appealed for international aid to save its livestock. Only about 20 per cent of the land is suitable for cultivation, the principal crops being rice, cotton, millet, cassava and groundnuts. In 1979 there was an estimated shortfall in grain crops of 259,831 metric tons. In 1980 the recurrence of drought resulted in a drop in food crop production. Shortages have been aggravated by the long-standing problem of crop smuggling across Mali's borders to the more lucrative markets of the Ivory Coast, Senegal and Upper Volta. There is extensive river fishing and dried and smoked fish are exported.

Industry still occupies a minor position in the economy and is based on the processing of food, cotton, hides, skins and wool. State enterprises in trade and industry account for 90 per cent of the total. Apart from old-established salt mines, small quantities of phosphates, gold and uranium are mined. Phosphate production began at Tilemsi in 1976, with estimated reserves of 20-30 million tons. Present output is 1,500-2,000 tons a year and there are plans for a processing plant. There has been extensive prospecting for lithium, diamonds and petroleum, and deposits of iron ore have been discovered at Kalana and Bala. Gold reserves at Kalana are estimated at 30,000 kg., and are currently being mined at a rate of 400 kg. per year by the state mining company and the U.S.S.R. There are considerable deposits of bauxite and manganese.

The increasing trade deficit is giving rise to concern. According to the Central Bank of Mali, the value of imports reached 111,000 million Mali francs in 1979, while exports totalled only 47,100 million francs. The major export is cotton, which accounted for over half of export revenue in 1979. In 1980 the balance of payments deficit stood at 6,800 million Mali francs, and the trade deficit was 53,100 million Mali francs. Mali remains one of the ten poorest countries in the world in terms of income per head.

Since Mali's return to the Franc Zone in 1967, an austerity programme has been in force as a condition of French support for the Mali franc. Wages have been held down and the state sector has been restricted. However, some reform of the state companies and the bureaucracy took place in 1981, and there were efforts to liberalize the economy and allow foreign private and public capital to invest in the private sector. Mali has applied to rejoin the Union Monétaire Ouest Africaine (UMOA) which it left in 1962 after creating its own currency, the Mali franc. The return to the CFA franc should reduce smuggling, particularly of agricultural products, and boost trade. It is hoped that the move will encourage a greater flow of foreign capital into the country. The aims of the 1974-78 development plan were not all achieved, although 67 per cent of the projects were completed. An important aspect of this plan was the restructuring of the banking and financial system. The 1981-85 Plan emphasises the development of the rural economy and aims to achieve self-sufficiency in food production. Projects include the establishment of a fund to develop underground water resources and the exploitation of fossil fuels as well as hydroelectric and renewable forms of energy. Three dams are already supplying power and work has begun on the Manantali dam, part of the Senegal river development project undertaken with Senegal and Mauritania. Mali has 30 solar pumps supplying power to villages and a 75 kW solar centre at Dire.

Transport and Communications

The River Senegal and the River Niger, which is navigable for its total length in Mali of 1,782 km., form the chief arteries of transport. The only railway runs from Koulikoro via Bamako to the Senegal border (640 km.) and then to Dakar (Senegal). Roads are being improved, and about half the 14,000 km. of classified roads are open all the year. The construction of a 556-km. Saharan road, linking Gao in Mali with North Africa, which will serve as an important trade route, began in 1979. Domestic and international air services are provided by Air Mali and several foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

The Government maintains anti-yellow fever services and there are 14 state hospitals and 367 medical centres. In 1978 Mali had 225 physicians and four medical training schools.

Education

Education is free and, in theory, compulsory for all children between the ages of 6 and 15. There is a nine-year basic and three-year secondary education. In 1976 only 25 per cent of children eligible for primary education were enrolled in schools. There were six schools of higher education in 1976 but many students receive higher education abroad, mainly in France and Senegal. A national literacy programme is being carried out. In 1978 there were 30,000 students at 1,321 literacy centres.

Tourism

Tourism is being developed, based on hunting and fishing and the celebrated city of Timbuktu. New hotels are being built at Mopti and Timbuktu. In 1977 22,132 tourists visited Mali.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 25th (Africa Day), July 14th (National Day), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 22nd (Independence Day), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), November 19th (Anniversary of Coup d'Etat), December 25th (Christmas), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 20th (Armed Forces Day), April 1st-3th (Easter).

FINANCE

100 centimes=1 franc malien (Mali franc).

Coins: 5, 10 and 25 Mali francs.

Notes: 50, 100, 500, 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 Mali francs.

Exchange rates (December 1981): 1 Mali franc=1 French centime=50 centimes CFA;

£1 sterling=1,091.25 Mali francs; U.S. $1=567.3 Mali francs.

10,000 Mali francs=£9.16=$17.63.

Note: The Mali franc was introduced in July 1962, replacing (at par) the franc CFA. From December 1958 the franc CFA was valued at 3.6 milligrammes of gold, equal to 0.4051 U.S. cent (U.S. $1=246.853 francs CFA). Since January 1960 the franc CFA has been equivalent to 2 French centimes. The Mali franc maintained this value until May 1967, when it was devalued by 50 per cent to 1.8 milligrammes of gold, equal to 1 French centime or 0.20255 U.S. cent (U.S. $1=493.706 Mali francs). In August 1969 the Mali franc was devalued (in line with the French franc) to 1.6 milligrammes of gold, the exchange rate being 1 Mali franc=0.18004 U.S. cent ($1=555.419 Mali francs) until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the official rate was 1 Mali franc=0.19547 U.S. cent ($1=511.570 Mali francs). Since March 1973 the French authorities have ceased to maintain the franc-dollar rate within previously agreed margins. As a result, the value of the Mali franc has fluctuated on foreign exchange markets in line with the French franc. The average market rates (Mali francs per U.S. dollar) were: 504.4 in 1972; 445.4 in 1973; 481.0 in 1974; 428.6 in 1975; 478.0 in 1976; 491.3 in 1977; 451.3 in 1978; 425.4 in 1979; 422.6 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the central exchange rate between August 1969 and June 1972 was £1=1,333.01 Mali francs (1 Mali franc=0.07502p).

THE CONSTITUTION

The 1960 Constitution was abrogated by the Military Committee of National Liberation (CMLN), which in November 1968 replaced it by a "Fundamental Law". Under this, the CMLN and the Supreme Court ruled by decree. The CMLN published a new Constitution on April 26th, 1974, and it was approved by referendum on June 2nd, 1974. Following a five-year transition period, during which the CMLN continued to rule the country, this Constitution was adopted in June 1979 and amended in October 1981. It provides for a President and Head of Government, elected by universal suffrage for a six-year term, and a National Assembly for a three-year period. Mali is a single-party state.

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

President: Brig.-Gen. MOUSSA TRAORÉ (assumed power November 19th, 1968; elected President June 19th, 1979).

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

LEGISLATURE

ASSEMBLÉE NATIONALE

In accordance with the 1974 Constitution, a National Assembly comprising 82 deputies was elected on June 19th, 1979, for a four-year term. The single-party list of candidates was drawn up from nominations by each UDPM local branch committee. An amendment to the Constitution of October 1981 reduced the term of office to three years.

POLITICAL PARTY

Union Démocratique du Peuple Malien (UDPM): single party provided for in 1974 constitution; f. 1979. MAURITANIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Islamic Republic of Mauritania lies in north-west Africa, with Morocco and Algeria to the north, Mali to the east and south and Senegal due south. The north of the country is mainly desert, but the south is more fertile and suitable for cultivation. The climate is hot and dry. The official languages are French and Arabic; the Moorish majority speak Arabic or Hassaniya, while the large negro population in the south is mainly French-speaking. The population is almost entirely Muslim, Islam being the State religion. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is emerald green with a five-pointed gold star and a horizontal gold crescent moon in the centre. The capital is Nouakchott.

Recent History

Mauritania was formerly part of French West Africa and achieved its independence on November 28th, 1960. Moktar Ould Daddah, leader of the Parti du peuple mauritanien (PPM), became Prime Minister in June 1959 and Head of State at independence. He was elected President in August 1961. Mauritania became a one-party state, under the PPM, in 1964. After independence Mauritania moved away from the French sphere of influence and towards closer relations with Arab nations, it became a member of the Arab League and the Arab Common Market.

When Spain withdrew from its Saharan territories Mauritania was a party, with Morocco and Spain, to the tripartite agreement of November 1975 and established control over the southern portion of the territory, Tiris el Gharbia, in February 1976, despite international calls for a referendum there.

Guerrilla fighting ensued between Polisario, the Western Sahara liberation organization backed by Algeria, and Moroccan and Mauritanian troops. Polisario attacks on villages and particularly the railway line, essential for the transport of iron ore from Zouérate, were highly damaging to the economy.

Relations with Algeria, which refused to stop supporting the Polisario base-camps at Tindouf inside its borders, were broken off in 1976. Relations with Morocco, which had been poor until the renunciation of its claims to a "greater Morocco" including Mauritania, grew more friendly and in June 1977 a joint defence pact was formed. The kidnapping of French technicians in the mining areas brought open French military aid for Mauritania.

By 1977 Mauritania was spending two-thirds of its budget on defending territory which promised no economic benefits, and the disruption of iron ore exports by the war, combined with the effects of drought, had brought the country almost to bankruptcy. In July 1978 President Daddah was deposed in a bloodless coup led by the army chief of staff, Col. Moustapha Ould Salek, who replaced existing government bodies with a Military Committee to direct policy. Polisario immediately declared a ceasefire with Mauritania, but further progress was thwarted by the intransigence of Morocco, which still had several thousand troops stationed in Mauritania. The deadlock led to internal political instability, and in April 1979 real power was assumed by Lt.-Col. Ahmed Bouceif, formerly Minister of Fisheries, as Prime Minister, and then (after Bouceif's death in an air accident in May) by Lt.-Col. Mohamed Haidalla, formerly Minister of Defence: both were apparently in favour of adhering to the Moroccan alliance, although emphasizing the need for peace. President Salek resigned in July and was replaced by Lt.-Col. Mohamed Louly, former Minister of Public Affairs. Renewed attempts to bring about a settlement were interrupted in July by the announcement that Polisario had broken the year-old ceasefire. Later that month the OAU called for a referendum to be held on self-determination for all the people of the Western Sahara. These events provided the impetus for Mauritania's final withdrawal from the war: Haidalla declared that Mauritania had no territorial claims in the area and a peace treaty was signed with Polisario on August 5th. At once Morocco claimed Tiris el Gharbia, withdrawing most of its troops from Mauritania to defend the annexed territory. Diplomatic relations between Mauritania and Algeria were re-established.

In January 1980 there was yet another change of power: Haidalla took over from Louly as President and dismissed members of the Military Committee who were, he alleged, impeding national recovery. A new civilian Government was formed in December, to be responsible for drawing up charters for new democratic institutions.

In 1981 relations with Morocco deteriorated after an attempted coup in March, in which the Mauritanian Government believed Morocco to be involved. A cabinet reshuffle put an end to the brief period of civilian rule; the new Prime Minister, Lt.-Col. Maouya Ould Sidi Ahmed Taya, former Minister of Mines and Energy, also took over the Defence portfolio. In October Morocco claimed that Polisario had bases in Mauritania and that Mauritanian soldiers had been involved in recent attacks on Moroccan territory; these accusations were, however, strenuously denied.

Another problem for successive governments in recent years has been unrest among the negro population in the south, who complain of discrimination, objecting particularly to the imposition of the Arabic language in educational and official spheres. Slavery was formally abolished in July 1980, although difficulties were experienced in enforcing this law.

Government

After the coup in July 1978 the National Assembly was suspended together with the sole political party. The Constitution was replaced by a Charter giving legislative and executive power to the Military Committee for National Recovery (CMRN), known from April 1979 onwards as the Military Committee for National Salvation (CMSN). The CMSN is headed by the President and had eight Permanent Members and ten other Members in January 1982. A draft Constitution was published in December 1980, but had still to be approved by referendum. The President of the Republic would be elected by universal suffrage for a six-year term, and the National Assembly for a four-year term. Executive power would be vested in the Prime Minister, appointed by the President. A multi-party system was envisaged.

MAURITANIA

Defence

The armed forces expanded rapidly between 1975 and 1978, with Moroccan and French assistance. In July 1981 the army numbered 7,500 men, the navy 320 and the air force 150. Paramilitary Forces totalled 1,500. Military service for two years is compulsory. Defence expenditure amounted to U.S. $29 million in 1980.

Economic Affairs

Nomadic Moors, living by herding cattle and sheep, made up some 70 per cent of the population before the persistent drought beginning in the early 1970s killed much of their livestock (including about half the cattle) and drove many to the towns: according to the 1976 census, only about a third of the population were still nomads. Settled agriculture is restricted to black farmers in the Senegal valley, who grow dates, millet, sorghum and rice with the aid of irrigation, projects including the Gorgol Noir scheme and the building of a dam at Diama. Compared with about 60 per cent in the 1960s, agriculture accounted for only 25 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980.

Rich offshore fishing grounds were exploited mainly by foreign vessels, but the creation in 1980 of an exclusive economic zone extending for 200 nautical miles (370 km.) offshore was expected to increase Mauritanian receipts, which had already risen that year to 2,000 million ouguiya. The freezing and processing of fish at Nouadhibou is a significant industry. Plans for industrial development have been hampered by financial difficulties; however, a previously unused sugar refinery at Nouakchott was to begin operations in 1982, with Algerian help. It was hoped that the oil refinery at Nouadhibou would also be reactivated. An electrical steel-works was opened at Nouadhibou in 1981.

Iron ore from F'Derik, near Zouérate, accounts for 75 per cent of export earnings, but production was disrupted by Polisario raids. After the ceasefire in July 1978 iron ore production increased from 7.4 million metric tons to nearly 9 million in 1980, and in 1981 work began on opening up new reserves at Guelbs, as old mines would be exhausted by 1990. Copper exploitation at Akjoujt was also resumed and drilling for petroleum and uranium was continued.

Mauritania is dependent on large sums of foreign aid, the chief donors being Arab countries, especially Kuwait and Iraq. In 1980 the Government changed economic policy, switching resources from prestigious industrial schemes to the neglected rural sector in an attempt at self-sufficiency in food crops. Austerity measures were introduced in order to eliminate by 1985 the current deficit on the balance of payments (U.S. $117.6 million in 1977, $81.9 million in 1978 but up to $116.4 million in 1979) and reorganize the repayment of Mauritania's foreign debt ($732 million in 1978, $590 million in 1979).

Transport and Communications

The Senegal river is an important artery of transport.

A 650-km. railway runs from Zouérate to Nouadhibou for the transport of iron ore. The port of Nouadhibou has been extended to handle mineral exports and accommodate the fishing industry, and a deep-water port, financed by the People's Republic of China, is due to be completed at Nouakchott by 1984. The main international airport is at Nouakchott, with a second at Nouadhibou. There are about 8,900 km. of roads and tracks, and the first section (607 km.) of the 1,100-km. Trans-Mauritanian highway linking Nouakchott and Néma was opened in June 1978. Work began on the second section in October 1979, and was due to be completed in 1982.

Social Welfare

The National Social Insurance Fund administers family allowances, industrial accident benefits, insurance against occupational diseases, and old-age benefits. Nouakchott has a hospital with 450 beds and there are ten regional hospitals. In 1978 the country had 87 physicians.

Education

Despite expansion in education facilities since 1960 including provisions for nomadic families, only 22 per cent of children attended school in 1979. Implementation of a plan to make Arabic the compulsory first language in all schools was postponed for six years in 1979 as a result of protests from the French-speaking south. The adult literacy rate was estimated to be 17 per cent in December 1976. There are plans for a university to open in 1983, whilst degree courses were due to begin in 1981/82 at the Ecole Nationale d'Administration and Ecole Nationale des Sciences in Nouakchott.

Tourism

Owing to the hot climate, the best months for visiting Mauritania are from November to May. There are hotels in the principal towns. Hunting, visiting the oases, and touring the Berber villages are the chief attractions.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 21st (Leilat al Meiraj—Ascension of Muhammad), May 25th (African Liberation Day), July 23rd (Korité—Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th (Tabaski—Id ul Adha), October 19th (Muslim New Year), November 28th (National Day), December 28th (Mouloud—Birth of Muhammad).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

5 khoums = 1 ouguiya.

Coins: 1 khoum; 1, 5, 10 and 20 ouguiya.

Notes: 100, 200 and 1,000 ouguiya.

1,000 ouguiya = £10.62 = $20.43

Note: The ouguiya was introduced on June 29th, 1973, replacing the franc CFA at the rate of 1 ouguiya = 5 francs CFA = 10 French centimes. The fixed relationship to French currency (and thus to the franc CFA) was maintained until the end of 1973. Since then the rate against the U.S. dollar has been fixed by the Central Bank of Mauritania and is adjusted from month to month. The average exchange rates (ouguiya per U.S. dollar) were: 45.18 in 1974; 43.18 in 1975; 44.96 in 1976; 45.68 in 1977; 46.16 in 1978; 45.89 in 1979; 45.92 in 1980. For details of previous changes in the exchange rate of the franc CFA, see the chapter on Cameroon.

THE CONSTITUTION

The republican constitution promulgated in 1961 was suspended in July 1978. A provisional Constitution, to be endorsed by referendum, was published on December 19th, 1980. A Constitutional Council, consisting of five members chosen by the President and approved by the National Assembly, was to be set up to supervise the referendum.

The main points of the proposed Constitution were as follows:

Mauritania is a social, democratic, indivisible, parliamentary, Islamic republic.

The President of the Republic is elected for six years by universal suffrage, with an absolute majority. He may be re-elected only once.

The National Assembly is elected for four years. Executive power is vested in the Prime Minister, who also appoints and dismisses Ministers. He is chosen by the President from the members of the majority party or coalition.

The new Constitution envisages a multi-party system and the establishment of Arabic as the official language.

LEGISLATURE

ASSEMBLÉE NATIONALE

At the general election of August 1976, 77 members were elected, all belonging to the Parti du peuple mauritanien. The Assembly was dissolved following the military coup in July 1978, when the Military Committee for National Recovery (now Salvation) announced that it was assuming all powers until "democratic institutions" were set up.

POLITICAL PARTY

Following the coup in July 1978, the sole political party, the Parti du peuple mauritanien (PPM), was suspended.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Supreme Court: Nouakchott; f. 1961; intended to ensure the independence of the judiciary; the Supreme Court is competent in juridical, administrative and electoral matters; Pres. Lt.-Col. CHEIKH OULD BOYDA; Vice-Pres. (Muslim Law) MOHAMED SALEM OULD ADDOUD; Vice-Pres. (Modern Law) BA MOHAMED EL GHALI.

Special Court of Justice: consists of a President, who is a stipendiary magistrate, and eleven other judges, six of whom are elected by the National Assembly from amongst its members, and five of whom are elected by the Assembly from a list of Islamic lawyers.

The Code of Law was founded in 1961 and subsequently modified to integrate modern law with Muslim institutions and practices. The main courts are: a tribunal de première instance (Magistrate's court) with six regional sections, 42 tribunaux de cadis (departmental civil courts), labour courts, military courts and the Court of State Security. In June 1978 it was announced that a nine-member commission had been appointed to revise existing legislation in line with Islamic Sharia law and that the Koran would be the basis of all future legislation.

In October 1978 a special court with 13 judges was set up to investigate offences against the security of the state.

Islamic law was introduced in February 1980, as the Government felt that modern law was incapable of curbing crime. A special Islamic court was to be established, presided over by a magistrate of Muslim law, assisted by two counsellors and two ulemas (Muslim jurists and interpreters of the Koran).

RELIGION

Islam is the official religion of Mauritania. The population is almost entirely Muslim of the Malekite sect, less than 1 per cent being Christian. The most important of the religious groups is that of the Qadiriya (Leader M. OULD SHEIKH SIDYA). Chinguetti, in the district of Adrar, is the seventh Holy Place in Islam. The 4,750 Roman Catholics, who are mainly aliens, come under the jurisdiction of the Diocese of Nouakchott; Bishop of Nouakchott Mgr. ROBERT DE CHEVIGNY, B.P. 353.

MAURITIUS

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Mauritius lies in the Indian Ocean. The principal island, from which the country takes its name, lies 800 km. east of Madagascar. The other main islands are Rodrigues, the Agalega Islands and the Cargados Carajos Shoals (St. Brandon Islands). The climate is sub-tropical, and cyclones can be severe. English, French, Creole (derived from French), Hindi, Urdu and Chinese are all spoken by the various communities, although English is the official language and Creole the lingua franca. Europeans and Creoles are mostly Roman Catholics; 70 per cent of the Indian population are Hindus, the rest being Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has four equal horizontal stripes: red, blue, gold and green. The capital is Port Louis.

Recent History

The island was a French colony from 1715 to 1810, when it was taken by Britain. Settlement came mainly from East Africa and India (Mauritius had no indigenous human inhabitants) and the European population is largely French-speaking. In 1965 the United Kingdom transferred the Chagos Archipelago (including the island of Diego Garcia), a Mauritian dependency about 2,000 km. north-east of the main island, to the newly-created British Indian Ocean Territory. Subsequently Mauritius has campaigned for the return of the islands, particularly following the development of Diego Garcia as a major U.S. military base in 1980. Mauritius also claims the French-held island of Tromelin.

Following the victory of the pro-independence Labour Party in the 1967 general election, Mauritius attained independence within the Commonwealth on March 12th, 1968, with Dr. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam as Prime Minister.

Mauritius is plagued by political, industrial and racial unrest. Political opposition to Ramgoolam's coalition governments since 1970 has come mainly from the left-wing Mouvement Militant Mauricien (MMM), organized by its Secretary-General, Paul Bérenger. With the growth of this party and a general strike in 1971, general elections scheduled for 1972 were postponed. The coalition of the Labour Party and the Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate (PMSD) broke down in December 1973 after disagreement over foreign policy and increases in taxation, but the Labour Party continued in office in coalition with the Comité d'Action Musulman (CAM). The Government pursued a policy of closer relations with continental Africa and a wide variety of socialist states, while maintaining the established contacts with France, India and the United Kingdom.

At the general elections held in December 1976 the MMM became the largest single party in the Legislative Assembly, but Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam formed a new, though fragile, coalition government incorporating the Independence Party (an electoral alliance of the Labour Party and the CAM) and the PMSD. General elections were expected to be held in early 1982, for which the MMM and Parti Socialiste Mauricien agreed to form an alliance.

A general strike in support of sugar workers' demands in August 1979 led to violent incidents and the detention of 30 people, including several MMM members of the Legislative Assembly. The strike was called off in September after general agreement between the Government and union officials, but 600 strikers were dismissed. These were reinstated in September 1980 after a hunger strike.

Government

Executive power is vested in the British monarch as Head of State, represented by an appointed Governor-General who is guided by the advice of the Council of Ministers. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral Legislative Assembly, with 71 members: the Speaker, 62 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years and eight "additional" members (the most successful losing candidates of each community). The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Council of Ministers is responsible to the Assembly.

Defence

The country has no standing defence forces although there is a special police mobile unit to ensure internal security.

Economic Affairs

The island is an extreme example of a one-crop economy, with sugar production accounting for about 75 per cent of export earnings, over 90 per cent of total cultivable land, and employing about 30 per cent of the labour force. The sugar crop is vulnerable to international commodity prices, disease and the weather. Output of raw sugar was 730,169 metric tons in 1979 but, after four severe cyclones, fell to 475,300 tons in 1980 and the EEC quota of 500,000 tons had to be made up out of the 1981 production, which was estimated at 620,000 tons.

Since 1959 the Government has been expanding the production of tea and it now constitutes a valuable export, although the South African decision to cut its buying quota in 1978 has curbed the prospects for growth. Subsistence farming is on a very small scale and food imports, mainly rice, accounted for 25 per cent of import expenditure in 1979. The cost of petroleum imports almost doubled between 1978 and 1979, and was 14 per cent of total imports in 1980; power is also provided by hydroelectric sources and the recycling of sugar by-products. Technical assistance from Japan and the U.S.S.R. is regenerating the fishing industry.

By developing subsistence agriculture, industry and tourism, the Government aims to diversify the economy and reduce unemployment (42,000 in mid-1981). The Mauritius Exporting Processing Zone has, since 1971, successfully attracted foreign investment in manufacturing, particularly in import substitution industries and in 1980 these accounted for 25 per cent of total exports and 97 per cent of all manufacturing exports.

A five-year plan due to commence in 1980 was abandoned because of the deteriorating economic situation, and replaced with one for 1980-82, aiming to reduce the trade deficit of Rs. 1,200 million in 1979 to Rs. 475 million by 1982; however, in 1980 the deficit grew to a new record of Rs. 1,380 million. Other features of the plan include schemes to widen the range of industries, particularly in the high technology sector, and to diversify export markets. G.N.P. is scheduled to grow at an annual rate of 5.3 per cent. Textiles, electronics, plastic and leather goods, and synthetic gemstones are important in the industrial sector. Tourism is the country's second-ranking earner of foreign exchange and has expanded rapidly since 1967.

An IMF loan of Rs. 730 million arranged in October 1979 was cancelled at the Government's request after the increase in import prices and the cyclones upset the financial stabilization programme, and was replaced by an interim standby agreement for Rs. 110 million.

Mauritius is a member of OCAM, which it joined in 1971. In 1972 it became an associate member of the EEC and exports to the Community benefit from a reduction in tariffs. In 1974 Mauritius was allotted an annual quota of 500,000 metric tons of raw sugar by the EEC to ensure some stability in what is a highly volatile market. The price paid by the EEC to Mauritius is reviewed annually.

Transport and Communications

Port Louis is served by several cargo shipping lines crossing the Indian Ocean, as well as coastal shipping services, and there is an international airport. Modernization of the harbour at Port Louis was completed in 1980. The construction of a new airport at Plaines des Roches has been delayed due to lack of finance. The road network is good considering the mountainous terrain, and there are 837 km. of main roads.

Social Welfare

The social infrastructure includes a well developed public health service with 12 hospitals and 53 dispensaries. In the private sector there are 19 hospitals and 55 child and maternity clinics. A system of relief work for the unemployed and a monthly allowance for families with three children under the age of 14 have been established. In June 1978 a national pension scheme was introduced.

Education

Primary and secondary education are free. In 1980 123,666 children attended government and government-aided primary schools. About 90 per cent of primary school age children attended schools in 1980, though education is not compulsory. The large private sector in secondary education was indirectly taken over by the Government in 1977 and, in 1980, total enrolment was 80,881. Teacher training is undertaken by a college and the Institute of Education which also pioneers education reform. Six junior technical schools, six laboratories and workshops, an industrial training centre and five rural education centres were under construction in 1977, with assistance from the World Bank. The University of Mauritius had 470 students in 1980 and a large number of students study abroad. In 1980 the adult literacy rate was about 80 per cent.

Tourism

Major attractions include the superb beaches, fine mountain scenery, the ideal climate and the blend of cultures. Distance from major centres of population has so far limited the industry's development to the luxury trade but growth in recent years has been remarkable and tourism has now become the country's second largest earner of foreign exchange. Gross government revenue rose from Rs. 18 million in 1967 to Rs. 275 million in 1979. The number of visitors increased from 15,000 in 1968 to 128,360 in 1979, but high air fares restricted numbers to 121,740 in 1981. Tourism provides work for over 10,000 people and it is hoped that the number of visitors will rise to 200,000 by 1985.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 15th (Assumption), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st, 2nd (New Year), March 12th (National Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

The usual Hindu holidays are also observed.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Mauritian rupee.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents; 1 rupee.

Notes: 5, 10, 25 and 50 rupees.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 19.77 rupees; U.S. $1 = 10.28 rupees;
100 Mauritian rupees = £5.06 = $9.73.

Note: Before January 1976 the Mauritian rupee was tied to the pound sterling, its value being fixed at 7½p (£1 = 13.333 rupees). From November 1967 to August 1971 the central exchange rate was 1 rupee = 18 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 5.556 rupees). In December 1971 the U.S. dollar was devalued but the rupee retained its value in terms of sterling and the IMF Special Drawing Right (SDR), so the new exchange rate was 1 rupee = 19.543 U.S. cents ($1 = 5.117 rupees). However, in June 1972 the rupee was "floated" in line with sterling. The average market exchange rates (rupees per U.S. dollar) were: 5.3385 in 1972; 5.4422 in 1973; 5.7031 in 1974; and 6.0268 in 1975. In January 1976 the rupee's link with sterling was broken and the currency was pegged to the SDR (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies since July 1974) at a mid-point of 7.714 rupees per SDR, representing a depreciation of 28 per cent from its pre-float valuation. This rate remained in effect until October 1979, when a new rate of 1 SDR = 10 rupees was introduced. The currency was again devalued in September 1981, when the rate was set at 1 SDR = 12 rupees. The exchange rate against the U.S. dollar is adjusted from month to month. The average rates (rupees per dollar) were: 6.6824 in 1976; 6.5996 in 1977; 6.1410 in 1978; 6.4017 in 1979; 7.6896 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Mauritius Independence Order, 1968, as amended by the Constitution of Mauritius (Amendment) Act No. 39 of 1969, provides for a Cabinet consisting of the Prime Minister and not more than twenty other Ministers. The Prime Minister, appointed by the Governor-General, is the member of the Legislative Assembly who appears to the Governor-General best able to command the support of the majority of members of the Assembly. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General acting in accordance with the advice of the Prime Minister.

The Legislative Assembly, which has a normal term of five years, consists of the following:

- (i) The Speaker.
- (ii) Sixty-two elected members.
- (iii) Eight additional members.
- (iv) The Attorney-General if not an elected member.

For the purpose of electing members of the Legislative Assembly, the island of Mauritius is divided into twenty-three member constituencies. Rodrigues returns two members. The official language of the Legislative Assembly is English but any member may address the Chair in French.

MEXICO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United Mexican States (the third largest country in Latin America) are bordered to the north by the U.S.A. and to the south by Guatemala and Belize. The Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean lie to the east, and the Pacific Ocean and Gulf of California to the west. The climate varies with altitude. The lowlands are hot and wet with an average temperature of 18°C (64°F) while the highlands are temperate. Much of the north and west is desert. The principal language is Spanish, the mother tongue of 90 per cent in 1970, while about 8 per cent speak indigenous languages. About 96 per cent of the population are Roman Catholics. The national flag (proportions 7 by 4) consists of vertical green, white and red stripes, the central white stripe being charged with the state emblem, an eagle holding a snake in its beak. The capital is Mexico City.

Recent History

Conquered by Hernán Cortés in the sixteenth century, Mexico was ruled by Spain until the wars of independence of 1810-21. After the war of 1846 Mexico ceded half of its territory to the U.S.A. Attempts at political and social reform led to civil war in the 1860s and repudiation of debts led to war with Britain, the U.S.A. and France. The Austrian Archduke Maximilian, whom France tried to install as Emperor of Mexico, was shot in 1867. Order was restored during the dictatorship of Porfirio Díaz, which lasted from 1876 until the Revolution of 1910. The Constitution of 1917 embodied the aims of the Revolution by revising land ownership, drafting a labour code and curtailing the power of the Church.

Since 1929 the country has been dominated by the Partido Revolucionario Institucional (PRI) in an effective one-party system, while maintaining a democratic form of election. The President from 1934 until 1940, Lázaro Cárdenas, speeded up the land reform initiated under the 1917 constitution and nationalized the petroleum sector. He was succeeded by Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho, who embarked on a programme of industrialization. Avila's successor, President Miguel Alemán Valdés (1946-52), concentrated on expanding educational services. President Adolfo Ruiz Cortines held office from 1952 to 1958 and President Adolfo López Mateos from 1958 to 1964, when Lic. Gustavo Díaz Ordaz was elected President. The 1968 Olympic Games were held in Mexico City in October and were accompanied by violent worker and student demonstrations against the Government.

Lic. Luis Echeverría Alvarez won the presidential elections of 1970 and pledged that his government would extend the benefits of Mexico's prosperity to all sectors of the population. President Echeverría strengthened diplomatic links with countries of all political persuasions, particularly with Third World countries. In 1975 the Government signed trade and co-operation agreements with the EEC and CMEA in an effort to reduce its economic dependence on the U.S.A. Just before the end of his mandate, President Echeverría expropriated 100,000 hectares of land in Sonora, resulting in a majority protest by farm owners and businessmen throughout the country. Despite a court ruling, it was deemed impractical to return land to its owners and they were offered compensation instead.

In the July 1976 elections the PRI candidate, José López Portillo, a former Secretary of Finance, was elected President with almost 95 per cent of the votes cast. As President, he called for national unity and a period of austerity in order to deal with the critical condition of the economy. Various steps were taken to improve the economic situation and to create a more just society. In 1977 President López Portillo initiated political reforms intended to improve minority party representation in Congress and increase democratic participation by the people. However, as three-quarters of the seats were contested by the single-member constituency system, the PRI was certain of victory. In September 1981 the former Secretary for Planning and the Budget, Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, was nominated as the PRI candidate for the presidential elections to be held in July 1982. His nomination caused dissent among trade unions and also led to the resignation of the PRI's president, Javier García Paniagua. However, despite this opposition, he was expected to succeed López Portillo as President.

Mexico's foreign policy has been determined largely by relations with the U.S.A. Petroleum has given Mexico a new independence and, under President López Portillo, the country assumed the role of a Third World leader and hosted the North-South summit of 1981. In Central American foreign policy, Mexico has favoured the left-wing regimes in Cuba and Nicaragua, and in 1981 called for negotiations with the left-wing factions in El Salvador. This, together with the dispute over fishing rights at the beginning of the year, did not help relations with the U.S.A., despite President Reagan's show of goodwill in visiting Mexico immediately after taking office. In 1980 a Mexican Commission for Refugees was set up to deal with the influx of refugees from El Salvador, estimated at about 600 per day. Mexico, long noted for its policy of welcoming refugees (particularly those from Central America), suddenly adopted a harsher line in June 1981, when 2,000 Guatemalans were forcibly repatriated.

Government

Mexico is a federal republic comprising 31 states and a Federal District (around the capital). Under the 1917 Constitution, legislative power is vested in the bicameral National Congress, elected by universal adult suffrage. The Senate has 64 members (two from each state and the Federal District) who serve a six-year term. The Chamber of Deputies, directly elected for three years, has 400 seats, of which 300 are filled from single-member constituencies. The remaining 100 seats, allocated by proportional representation, are filled from minority parties' lists. Executive power is held by the President, directly elected for six years at the same time as the Senate. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet. Each state has its own constitution and is administered by a Governor (elected for six years) and an elected Chamber of Deputies.

Defence

Military service, on a part-time basis, is compulsory. In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 119,500: 95,000 in the army, 20,000 in the navy (including naval air force and marines) and 4,500 in the air force. Defence expenditure for 1981 was 27,600 million pesos.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture suffers from inefficient exploitation of small, non-irrigated plots and in 1980 contributed only 8.4 per cent of the G.D.P. although it employed about 40 per cent of the labour force. The principal food crops are maize, wheat, rice and kidney beans, and the major export crops are sugar cane, cotton, coffee, fruit and vegetables. An annual population growth rate of about 3 per cent and the fact that only about 15 per cent of land is cultivable forced Mexico to become a grain importer in the 1970s. Programmes to collectivize ejidos (state-owned small-holdings), aimed at increasing farm production, began under the administration of President López Portillo and 13.3 per cent of the 1981 budget was allocated to agriculture. The average annual growth rate in agricultural production between 1977 and 1980 was 4.5 per cent. This has been sustained by the introduction, in March 1980, of the Sistema Alimentario Mexicano which plans to make Mexico self-sufficient in basic grains by 1985 and aims to relieve malnutrition, which affects 40 per cent of the population. Although production fell in 1980, following Mexico's worst drought for 30 years, there was a record grain crop in 1981 which reduced grain imports by a quarter. The sugar crop, however, suffered badly because of the increased rainfall and 1981 production was 150,000 tons less than in the previous year. The forests provide a variety of hard and soft woods but are under-utilized. It is estimated that only 6 per cent of Mexico's annual fishing potential of 9 million tons is exploited. The 1977-82 fisheries plan aims at increasing fishing activities by 29 per cent and production by 361 per cent. An investment of 30,000 million pesos is intended to raise the catch from 674,000 tons in 1977 to 2.4 million tons by 1982.

Mexico is rich in minerals and hydrocarbons. It is the world's leading producer of silver and fluorite, ranks fourth in the production of mercury and lead, sixth in the production of antimony and seventh in the production of cadmium, manganese and zinc. In 1978 important deposits of phosphates were discovered in Baja California and between 1976 and 1981 proven uranium reserves doubled to 15,000 metric tons, with potential reserves of 25,000 metric tons. Mexico was the world's leading petroleum producer in 1921 but by 1938, when the industry was nationalized, production had fallen dramatically. The discovery of extensive petroleum reserves in Tabasco and Chiapas enabled average daily production to rise to 2.4 million b.p.d. in October 1980, and by July 1981, Mexico was the world's fourth largest producer. The state oil agency, Pemex, has declared that the Bay of Campeche is the richest offshore oilfield in the world, producing 560,000 b.p.d. in 1981, when a further deposit of 34,000 million barrels was found. Rock formation in the basin prevents more immediate exploitation of the reserves of the onshore field at Chicontepec, estimated at 106,000 million barrels. In September 1981 proven reserves of petroleum and gas stood at 72,000 million barrels and potential reserves at 250,000 million barrels, placing Mexico second only to Saudi Arabia in its documented reserves. Pemex was allocated 24 per cent (399,500 million pesos) of the 1980 federal budget, and is the largest single employer (with 100,000 employees) and the largest single industrial investor in Mexico. In March 1980 a production limit of 2.5-2.75 million b.p.d. was set by the Government, with 1.5 million available for export. In January 1980 the export of 300 million cubic feet of gas to the U.S.A. at a cost of U.S. $1 million per day began.

Vast petroleum and gas reserves have made the petrochemicals industry one of the fastest-growing sectors of the economy. Production reached 5.8 million metric tons in 1978 and 7.2 million tons in 1980. By 1981 81 petrochemical plants had been built and 32 were under construction.

Mexico has yet to make use of nuclear energy, although the Laguna Verde reactors will be activated in 1983 and 1984. It is hoped that by 1990 nuclear energy will supply 2,500 MW, and coal-fired plants a further 2,800 MW. Geothermal and hydroelectric resources are also to be developed to reduce the country's dependence on oil and gas.

Industrial production increased in 1976 by only 2.6 per cent over the previous year, but growth averaged 8.1 per cent annually from 1977 to 1980. These figures, however, include the petroleum and petrochemicals sector which grew by 22 per cent in 1979. Increased foreign and domestic investment and the need to create jobs rather than use oil revenues simply to import capital goods have encouraged industrial development, especially in the steel and motor sectors. Sidermex, the state-run steel corporation, intends to quadruple steel production to 18.5 million metric tons between 1980 and 1990; bringing total national production to 24 million metric tons. Although raw steel production rose by only 0.4 per cent in 1980, mainly due to strikes, power cuts and transport problems, output went up by 9.7 per cent in the first four months of 1981. The main steel plants are located at Lázaro Cárdenas, on the Pacific coast, and a further complex is to be developed at Altamira, on the Gulf of Mexico. Because of Mexico's limited supplies of coal, natural gas is to be used in the new reduction plants.

In 1976, when the G.D.P. rose by only 2 per cent, the peso was allowed to float freely and eventually settled at half its original level. The Government was obliged to accept the IMF's stabilization programme and the economy began to recover, with the annual growth rate averaging over 8 per cent in 1977-80. The adoption of stricter monetary and fiscal policies contributed to this recovery but the largest single factor was the growth of the petroleum industry. In 1981, however, there was a world surplus of oil and the president of Pemex, Jorge Díaz Serrano, cut the price of crude petroleum by U.S. $4 per barrel, in an attempt to increase sales. This move caused an outcry and he was eventually forced to resign. When oil prices were subsequently raised by $2, sales in July fell by more than half. The resulting loss of revenue has had an adverse effect on the Mexican economy, which achieved a growth rate of 7.5 per cent in 1981. The current account deficit rose from $7.471 million in 1980 to an estimated $10,800 million in 1981. The already high foreign debt, which stood at $33,800 million in 1980, increased to $48,700 million in 1981. The tourist industry declined by 6 per cent in the first quarter of 1981. With creeping devaluation of the peso and an inflation rate of about 30 per cent, the trend seemed set to continue.

To overcome the deficit, the Government is to make extensive cuts in federal spending and plans to redirect petrodollars to help consolidate an export-orientated industrial base. A reduction of 4 per cent was made on the original 1981 budget, Pemex's investment budget for 1982 was to be cut by 20 per cent, and petrol prices doubled. Work on the Mexico City Metro extension was suspended in October 1981, and output ceilings imposed on the motor industry to stem the large-scale importing of components. Import licences were introduced for some 300 items, in an attempt to reduce imports of manufactured goods. Priority is to be given to developing industries, notably the iron and steel industry, cement, pharmaceuticals, textiles and consumer durables, while the Government aims to create some 700,000 jobs per year to halt the rise in unemployment, at present estimated to be 10 per cent. Under-employment is around 40 per cent, with some 10 million people earning less than the minimum wage.

Transport and Communications

Road transport accounts for some 70 per cent of all public passenger traffic and 60 per cent of freight traffic. In 1980 there were 25,047 km. of railways and 213,000 km. of roads, including three sections of the Pan American Highway. The metro network in Mexico City was extended in 1979-80 but is still extremely overcrowded and it is planned to build 15 new lines by the year 2010. The difficult terrain encourages air transport and there are 28 international and 20 national airports and 1,040 landing fields and feeder airports. International air transport is provided by a large number of national and foreign airlines. Between 1981 and 1983 the Government plans to invest 25,000 million pesos in the four main industrial ports of Tampico, Coatzacoalcos, Lázaro Cárdenas and Salina Cruz in an attempt to redirect growth and facilitate exports. The port at Dos Bocas, on the Gulf of Mexico, will be the largest in Latin America when it is opened in 1982. A 300-km. railway link across the isthmus of Tehuantepec was also due for completion in 1982. It is to link the Caribbean port of Coatzacoalcos with the Pacific port of Salina Cruz and is expected to transport some 500,000 containers per year.

Social Welfare

Social welfare is administered by the Mexican Social Security Institute and financed by contributions from employers, employees and the Government. In May 1970 a new Labour Law was instituted to replace the existing law of 1931. It provided for longer holidays, overtime rates and restrictions, increased bonuses and trade union surveillance of company tax returns. Of particular note was the innovation of compulsory profit-sharing, and the law's demand that employers provide housing for their employees. By the end of 1979 about 38 million people were covered by the obligatory social security system. There is no unemployment benefit. In 1980 there were 5,945 hospitals, of which 2,666 belonged to the Social Security Institute. Some 1,500 medical units and 22 clinic hospitals were being constructed in rural areas.

Education

State education is free and compulsory. It covers six years of primary education but in 1979 it was proposed to increase it to ten years, including three years of secondary education. Much is being done in the field of adult education and the illiteracy rate dropped from 29 per cent in 1960 to 12 per cent in 1976. In 1978/79 there were 236 institutes of higher education, of which 49 were universities. In the 1980 federal budget 125,354 million pesos were allocated to education.

Tourism

In 1980 tourism provided Mexico's third biggest source of foreign exchange earnings. Over 80 per cent of visitors come from the U.S.A. and Canada. The country is famous for volcanoes, coastal scenery and the great Sierra Nevada (Sierra Madre). The relics of the Mayan and Aztec civilizations and of Spanish Colonial Mexico are of historic and artistic interest. Zihuatanejo on the Pacific coast and Cancún on the Caribbean are being developed as tourist resorts by the Government with funds supplied by the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank. However, in 1981, because of rising prices and the gradual devaluation of the peso, the tourist industry grew by only 2 per cent, against the 8.9 per cent target set by the 1979-85 Development Programme.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 5th (Anniversary of the Battle of Puebla), September 1st (President's Annual Message), September 16th (Independence Day), October 12th (Discovery of America), November 2nd (All Souls' Day), November 20th (Anniversary of the Revolution), December 12th (Day of Our Lady of Guadalupe), December 24th, 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 5th (Constitution Day), March 21st (Birthday of Benito Juárez), March 31st, April 1st, 2nd (Easter).

*All Souls' Day and Our Lady of Guadalupe are not official holidays, but are widely celebrated.

FINANCE

100 centavos = 1 Mexican peso.

Coins: 5, 10, 20 and 50 centavos; 1, 5, 10, 25 and 100 pesos.

Notes: 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 500, 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 pesos.

1,000 Mexican pesos = £20.04 = $38.55.

Note: From June 1949 to April 1954 the exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 8.65 Mexican pesos (1 peso = 11.56 U.S. cents). In April 1954 the par value of the peso was fixed at 8.0 U.S. cents ($1 = 12.50 pesos) and this remained in effect until August 1976, despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar (in December 1971 and February 1973). In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 30.00 pesos from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 32.57 pesos from December 1971 to June 1972. Since September 1976 the peso has been allowed to "float". The average market rate (pesos per U.S. dollar) was 15.426 in 1976; 22.573 in 1977; 22.767 in 1978; 22.805 in 1979; 22.951 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

The present Mexican Constitution was proclaimed on February 5th, 1917, at the end of the revolution which began in 1910 against the regime of Porfirio Díaz. Its provisions regarding religion, education and the ownership and exploitation of mineral wealth reflect the long revolutionary struggle against the concentration of power in the hands of the Church and the large landowners, and the struggle which culminated in the 1930s in the expropriation of the properties of the foreign oil companies. It has been amended from time to time.

GOVERNMENT

The President and Congress. The President of the Republic, is elected in agreement with the Council of Ministers and with the approval of Congress or of the Permanent Committee when Congress is not in session, may suspend constitutional guarantees in case of foreign invasion, serious disturbance, or any other emergency endangering the people.

The exercise of supreme executive authority is vested in the President, who is elected for six years and enters upon his office on December 1st of the year of his election. The presidential powers include the right to appoint and remove members of his cabinet, the Attorney-General and the governor of the Federal District; to appoint, with the approval of the Senate, diplomatic officials, the higher officers of the army, and ministers of the Supreme and higher courts of justice. He is also empowered to dispose of the armed forces for the internal and external security of the federation.

Congress is composed of a Chamber of Deputies elected every three years, and a Senate whose members hold office for six years. There is one deputy for every 250,000 people and for every fraction of over 125,000 people. The Senate is composed of two members for each state and two for the federal district. Regular sessions of Congress begin on September 1st and may not continue beyond December 31st of the same year. Extraordinary sessions may be convened by the Permanent Committee.

The powers of Congress include the right to pass laws and regulations; impose taxes; specify the bases on which the Executive may negotiate loans; declare war; raise, maintain and regulate the organization of the armed forces; establish and maintain schools of various types throughout the country; approve or reject the budget; sanction appointments submitted by the President of ministers of the Supreme Court and magistrates of the superior court of the Federal District; approve or reject treaties and conventions made with foreign powers; and ratify diplomatic appointments.

The Permanent Committee, consisting of 29 members of Congress (15 of whom are deputies and 14 senators), officiates when Congress is in recess, and is responsible for the convening of extraordinary sessions of Congress.

The States. Governors are elected by popular vote in a general election every six years. The local legislature is formed by deputies, who are changed every three years. The judicature is specially appointed under the Constitution by the competent authority (it is never subject to the popular vote).

Each state is a separate unit, with the right to levy taxes and to legislate in certain matters. The states are not allowed to levy inter-state customs duties.

The Federal District consists of Mexico City and several neighbouring small towns and villages. The Governor is appointed by the President.

EDUCATION

According to the Constitution, the providing of educational facilities is the joint responsibility of the federation, the states and the municipalities. Education shall be democratic, and shall be directed to developing all the faculties of the individual, at the same time imbuing him with a love of his country and a consciousness of international solidarity and justice. Religious bodies may not provide education, except training for the priesthood. Private educational institutions must conform to the requirements of the Constitution with regard to the nature of the teaching given. The education provided by the states shall be free of charge.

RELIGION

Religious bodies of whatever denomination shall not have the capacity to possess or administer real estate or capital invested therein. Churches are the property of the nation; the headquarters of bishops, seminaries, convents and other property used for the propagation of a religious creed shall pass into the hands of the State, to be dedicated to the public service of the federation or of the respective state. Institutions of charity, provided they are not connected with a religious body, may hold real property. The establishment of monastic orders is prohibited. Ministers of religion must be Mexican; they may not criticize the fundamental laws of the country in a public or private meeting; they may not vote or form associations for political purposes. Political meetings may not be held in places of worship.

LAND AND MINERAL OWNERSHIP

Article 27 of the Constitution vests direct ownership of minerals and other products of the subsoil, including petroleum and water, in the nation, and reserves to the federal government alone the right to grant concessions in accordance with the laws to individuals and companies, on the condition that they establish regular work for the exploitation of the materials. At the same time, the right to acquire ownership of lands and waters belonging to the nation, or concessions for their exploitation, is limited to Mexican individuals and companies, although the State may concede similar rights to foreigners who agree not to invoke the protection of their governments to enforce such rights. No alien may acquire direct ownership over lands and waters within an area 100 kilometres wide along the frontiers or 50 kilometres along the coast.

The same article declares null all alienations of lands, waters and forests belonging to towns or communities made by political chiefs or other local authorities in violation of the provisions of the law of June 25th, 1856,* and all concessions or sales of communally-held lands, waters and forests made by the federal authorities after December 1st, 1876. The population settlements which lack ejidos, or cannot obtain restitution of lands previously held, shall be granted lands in proportion to the needs of the population. The area of land granted to the individual may not be less than 10 hectares of irrigated or watered land, or the equivalent in other kinds of land.

The owners affected by decisions to divide and redistribute land (with the exception of the owners of farming or cattle-rearing properties) shall not have any right of redress, nor may they invoke the right of amparo† in protection of their interests. They may, however, apply to the Government for indemnification. Small properties, the areas of which are defined in the Constitution, will not be subject to expropriation. The Constitution leaves to Congress the duty of determining the maximum size of rural properties.

Monopolies and measures to restrict competition in industry, commerce or public services are prohibited.

A section of the Constitution deals with work and social security.

* The Lerdo Law against ecclesiastical privilege, which became the basis of the Liberal Constitution of 1857.

† The Constitution provides for the procedure known as juicio de amparo, a wider form of habeas corpus, which the individual may invoke in protection of his constitutional rights.

On December 30th, 1977, a Federal Law on Political Organizations and Electoral Procedure was promulgated. It includes the following provisions:

Legislative power lies in a General Congress which comprises a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate. The Chamber of Deputies shall comprise 300 deputies elected by majority vote within single-member electoral districts and up to 100 deputies elected by a system of proportional representation from regional lists within multi-member constituencies. The Senate comprises two members for each state and two for the Federal District, elected by majority vote.

Executive power is held by the President of the Republic of the United Mexican States, elected by majority vote.

Ordinary elections will be held every three years for the federal deputies and every six years for the senators and the President of the Republic on the first Sunday of July of the year in question. When a vacancy occurs among members of the Congress elected by majority vote, the Chamber in question shall call extraordinary elections, and when a vacancy occurs among members of the Chamber of Deputies elected by proportional representation it shall be filled by the candidate of the same party who received the next highest number of votes at the last ordinary election.

Voting is the right and duty of every citizen, male or female, over the age of 18 years.

The Constitution, The Government, State Governors

A political party shall be registered if it has at least 3,000 members in each one of at least half the states in Mexico or at least 300 members in each one of at least half of the single-member constituencies. In either case the total number of members must be no less than 65,000. A party can also obtain conditional registration if it has been active for at least four years. Registration is confirmed if the party obtains at least 1.5 per cent of the popular vote. All political parties shall have free access to the media.

POLITICAL PARTIES

The electoral reform of 1977 permitted new political parties and associations to be registered. (For details of conditions of registration, see the Constitution, above). Although the electoral system is predominantly based on single-member constituencies, an element of proportional representation ensures that the opposition parties obtain at least 100 of the 400 seats in the Chamber of Deputies.

Partido Revolucionario Institucional (PRI): Insurgentes Norte 59, México, D.F.; f. 1928 as the Partido Nacional Revolucionario, but is regarded as the natural successor to the victorious parties of the revolutionary period; broadly based and moderately left-wing government party; Pres. PEDRO OJEDA PAULLADA; Gen. Sec. JOSÉ DE LAS FUENTES RODRÍGUEZ; publ. La República.

Partido de Acción Nacional (PAN): Serapio Rendón 8, 4° piso, Colonia San Rafael, México 4, D.F.; f. 1939; right-wing, Catholic party; Pres. ABEL VINCENCIO TOVAR; Gen. Sec. G. MEDINA VÁLDEZ; publ. La Nación.

Partido Auténtico de la Revolución Mexicana (PARM): Río Nazas 168, Colonia Cuauhtémoc, México 5, D.F.; f. 1954 to sustain the ideology of the Mexican Political Constitution of 1917; 191,500 mems.; Pres. JESÚS GUZMÁN RUBIO; publ. El Auténtico.

Partido Demócrata Mexicano (PDM): Edison 89, Colonia Tabacalera, México 1, D.F.; f. 1974; conservative party; 84,000 mems.; Pres. GUMERSINDO MAGAÑA NEGRETE.

Partido Socialista de los Trabajadores (PST): Avda. México

199, Colonia Hipódromo Condesa, México 11, D.F.; f. 1973; Marxist-Leninist, but works with PRI; Pres. RAFAEL AGUILAR TALAMANTES.

Partido Socialista Unido (PSU): Durango 338, Colonia Roma, México 7, D.F.; f. 1981; coalition of the left comprising the following parties:

Partido Comunista Mexicano (PCM): Pres. ARNALDO MARTÍNEZ VERDUGO; publs. Oposición, Socialismo.

Partido del Pueblo Mexicano (PPM): Pres. ALEJANDRO GASCÓN MERCADO.

Partido Socialista Revolucionario (PSR): Pres. ROBERTO JARANILLO.

Movimiento de Acción Popular.

Movimiento de Acción y Unidad Socialista (MAUS): Pres. MIGUEL ANGEL VELASCO.

Of these, only the PCM was previously registered.

The Federal Electoral Commission granted conditional registration, subject to the results of the 1982 elections, to the Partido Revolucionario de los Trabajadores (PRT) and to the Partido Social Demócrata (PSD).

The following party is not legally recognized:

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The principle of the separation of the judiciary from the legislative and executive powers is embodied in the 1917 constitution. The judicial system is divided into two areas: the federal, dealing with federal law, and the state, dealing only with state law within each state.

The federal judicial system has both ordinary and constitutional jurisdiction and judicial power is exercised by the Supreme Court of Justice, Circuit Courts (Tribunales de Circuito) and District Courts (Juzgados de Distrito). The Supreme Court comprises 15 numerary ministers and five supernumeraries and may meet in joint session or in its separate chambers: Penal Affairs, Administrative Affairs, Civil Affairs and Labour Affairs.

The Circuit Courts may be collegiate, when dealing with the derecho de amparo (protection of constitutional rights of an individual), or unitary, when dealing with appeal cases. The Collegiate Circuit Courts comprise three magistrates and there are twelve circuits with residence in the cities of Mexico, Toluca, Guadalajara, Monterrey, Hermosillo, Puebla, Veracruz, Torreón, San Luis Potosí, Villahermosa, Morelia and Mazatlán. The Unitary Circuit Courts comprise one magistrate and there are nine circuits with residence in the cities of Mexico, Toluca, Guadalajara, Monterrey, Hermosillo, Puebla, Mérida, Torreón and Mazatlán.

There are 68 District Courts.

FINANCE

BANKING

An important banking reform allowed banks to perform multiple services, and has led to a reduction in the number of banks. Mexico is closed to foreign banks although in 1978 there were 98 foreign banks with representative offices. The one exception is Citibank, which established its resident branch in Mexico before the law, providing for representative offices only, was promulgated. (cap. = capital; p.u. = paid up; dep. = deposits; m. = million; res. = reserves; amounts in pesos unless otherwise stated)

MONGOLIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Mongolian People's Republic lies in Central Asia, with the Soviet Union to the north and China to the south, east and west. The climate is dry and extreme, with winter temperatures well below freezing. The main language is Mongolian. Kazakh is spoken in the province of Bayan-ölgii. There is no State religion but traces of Buddhist Lamaism and Shamanism still survive. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has red, blue and red vertical stripes with a golden star and the soyombo emblem on the left-hand stripe. The capital is Ulan Bator.

Recent History

Mongolia was formerly the Chinese province of Outer Mongolia. In 1911, following the republican revolution in China, Mongolian nationalists declared the province's independence. With backing from Tsarist Russia, Outer Mongolia gained autonomy, as a feudal Buddhist monarchy, but accepted Chinese suzerainty in 1915. Following the Russian revolution of 1917, China began to re-establish control in Mongolia in 1919. Mongol leaders appealed to the new Soviet regime for help in 1920. In March 1921 Mongolian communists met in the U.S.S.R. to found the Mongolian People's Party, called the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (MPRP) since 1924, and established a Provisional People's Government. After nationalist forces, with Soviet help, overthrew Chinese rule in the Mongolian capital, independence was proclaimed, and the monarchy restored, in July 1921. The U.S.S.R. recognized the People's Government in November.

In May 1924 the U.S.S.R. acknowledged Chinese authority in Mongolia but in November, after the death of Bogd Haan (King) Javdzandamba Hutagt VIII, the Mongolian People's Republic (M.P.R.) was proclaimed. Soviet troops left in 1925 but the M.P.R. continued to be dependent on the U.S.S.R.'s support. The Government mounted campaigns to collectivize the economy and to destroy the power of the nobility and Buddhist priests. In 1932 an armed uprising was suppressed with Soviet help. Following a purge of the MPRP and army leadership in 1936-39, power was concentrated in the hands of Marshal Horloogiyn Choybalsan as Prime Minister and Party leader. In 1939 a Japanese invasion from Manchuria was repelled by Soviet and Mongol forces at Halhyn-gol (Nomonhan) and the resultant truce lasted until war was declared on Japan in August 1945, four days before the Japanese surrender, and northern China was invaded. A plebiscite in October 1945 voted 100 per cent for independence and this was recognized by China in January 1946.

Choybalsan died in January 1952 and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Yumjaagiyn Tsendenbal. Dashiyn Damba became First Secretary of the MPRP in April 1954. During the 1950s Mongolia, previously recognized only by other communist countries, established relations with non-aligned states. Tsendenbal replaced Damba as First Secretary of the MPRP in November 1958 and a new constitution was adopted in July 1960. Mongolia has not been recognized by the U.S.A., which blocked its membership of the UN until October 1961.

During the early 1960s Mongolia attempted to maintain a neutral position in the Sino-Soviet dispute but since 1966 the Government has given unequivocal support to the U.S.S.R. and relations with China have greatly deteriorated. Mongolia accuses the Chinese Government of ill-treating the Mongol population in China and of wishing to expand its territory at Mongolia's expense. Several border incidents have been reported.

Jamsrangiyin Sambuu, Head of State since July 1954, died in May 1972. He was replaced in June 1974 by Tsendenbal, who retained the MPRP leadership but relinquished the post of Chairman of the Council of Ministers to Jambyn Batmönh.

Government

Under the 1960 Constitution, the supreme organ of state power is the People's Great Hural (Assembly). The Tenth Assembly, elected in June 1981, had 370 deputies elected (unopposed) by universal adult suffrage for five years. The Assembly usually meets only twice a year but elects a Presidium (a Chairman, two Vice-Chairmen, a Secretary and five other members) to be its permanent organ. The Chairman of the Presidium is Head of State. The highest executive body is the Council of Ministers, appointed by (and responsible to) the Assembly.

Political power is held by the communist Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (MPRP), the only legal party. The MPRP's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects the Central Committee (91 full members and 71 candidate members were elected in 1981) to supervise Party work. The Committee elects a Political Bureau (eight full members and three candidate members in 1982) to direct its policy.

For local administration, Mongolia is divided into 18 provinces and three municipalities.

Defence

In July 1981 defence forces comprised an army of 30,000 men with about 3,100 air force personnel and some Soviet technical advisers; the two infantry brigades may have been expanded into a division. Military service is for 2 years. Weapons, ammunition and vehicles are supplied by the U.S.S.R. Estimated defence expenditure for 1981 was 700 million tögrög, around 16 per cent of budgetary expenditure.

Economic Affairs

Animal herding is the main economic activity and is practised throughout the country. About 24.3 million horses, cattle, sheep, goats and camels were kept in 1981. The herdsmen are organized in collectives, of which there were 255 in 1981. State farms, of which there were 49 in 1981, practise agriculture on a large scale. The principal crops produced are cereals, potatoes and vegetables. There are 13 fodder farms.

Industry, which contributes less to G.N.P. than agriculture, is mainly devoted to the processing of food and livestock products such as hides and wool, textile manufacturing and light engineering. The industrial co-operatives, nationalized in 1972, have formed the basis of the new ministry of communal economy and services. The country's industrialization has been greatly assisted by foreign aid from other CMEA member countries, particularly the U.S.S.R. The major industrial centres are at Ulan Bator (over 50 per cent of gross industrial production), Darhan and Choybalsan, near supplies of coal. Other important minerals include fluor spar (for the Soviet iron and steel industry), tungsten, tin, gold and lead. Large-scale copper mining and concentrating began in 1978 at Erdenet, 330 km. north-west of Ulan Bator, where a combined copper-molybdenum works is also under development.

The deterioration of relations with China led to the loss of Chinese labour and consumer goods and of income from freight traffic between China and the Soviet Union. There have been frequent complaints of inefficiency and poor workmanship in industry. As in the U.S.S.R., a new management system is being introduced, involving greater flexibility in planning and the use of economic incentives.

In 1980, 80 per cent of Mongolia's trade was with the U.S.S.R., and over 18 per cent with other members of the CMEA. Most of the remainder was with China, Viet-Nam and other communist countries. In 1980 Mongolian-Soviet trade was worth over 883 million roubles. In the period 1976-79, Mongolia had a total deficit of 1,625.5 million roubles in its trade with the U.S.S.R., although 1,262.6 million was covered by Soviet credits.

In the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1976-80), national income rose by 30.9 per cent (Plan 37-41 per cent), gross industrial production by 58 per cent (Plan 60-65 per cent), average annual gross agricultural production by 6.3 per cent (Plan 26-30 per cent) and the volume of foreign trade by 50 per cent (Plan 40-45 per cent). The draft percentage increases for the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1981-85) were, respectively, 38-41, 52-58, 22-26 and 50-55.

Transport and Communications

In 1978 the Mongolian railway system had 1,710 km. of track in use. There are over 1,500 km. of surfaced roads but much traffic is cross-country by motor vehicle and along the caravan routes. Steamer services operate on the Selenge and Orhon rivers and Lake Hövsgöl. The length of navigable inland waterways totals 397 km. Air transport operates to Irkutsk and Moscow and throughout the country (33,400 km. of routes).

Social Welfare

There were 108 hospitals with 18,133 beds and 3,686 doctors in 1980, with ratios of 10 hospital beds and two doctors per 1,000 of the population (in Ulan Bator, 18 and four respectively). There are also a number of clinics and medical stations.

Education

Elementary education is compulsory. The curriculum varies between four, seven and ten years. In 1980/81 enrolment in the 571 general schools was 394,400. There is one university and six other institutions of higher education, 25 special secondary schools and 37 technical schools, with a total enrolment of 64,000.

Tourism

A foreign tourist service bureau, managed by the Ministry of Foreign Trade, was established in 1960 but tourism is not very developed. Mongolia had 8,000 foreign visitors in 1981. The country's main attractions are its scenery, wildlife and historical relics.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), July 11th (National Day), November 7th (U.S.S.R.'s October Revolution).

1983: January 1st (New Year), March 8th (International Women's Day).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Mongolian People's Republic is a sovereign democratic state of working people. All land, natural resources, factories, transport and banking organizations are state property. In addition to state ownership the people have co-operative ownership of public enterprises, especially in livestock herding. A limited degree of private ownership is also permitted.

The supreme state power is the People's Great Hural (Assembly), which was elected every four years by universal, direct and secret suffrage of all citizens over the age of 18. The term was extended to five years after the June 1981 elections. It has the power to amend the Constitution (by a two-thirds majority), adopting laws, formulating the basic principles of policy and approving the budget and economic plans. Its Presidium consists of a Chairman (who is Head of State), two Vice-Chairmen, a Secretary and five members. The functions of the Presidium are to interpret legislation and issue decrees, ratify treaties and appoint or dismiss (with the approval of the People's Great Hural) the members of the Council of Ministers.

The Council of Ministers is the highest executive power and consists of the Chairman, First Vice-Chairmen, Vice-Chairmen, Ministers and Chairmen of State Commissions.

Local government is exercised by Hurals and their executive committees at Aymag (Province) and Somon (County) levels.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Ulan Bator Railway: Ulan Bator; Dir. S. I. SOLOVYER; Deputy Dir. N. TSERENNOROV.

External Lines: from the Soviet frontier at Naushki Sübbaatar (connecting with the Trans-Siberian Railway) to Ulan Bator on to the Chinese frontier at Dzamyn-üüd/Erhlien and connecting with Beijing (total length 1,115 km.).

Branches: from Darhan to Sharyn Gol coalfield (length 68 km.); branch from Salhit near Darhan westwards to Erdenet (Erdenetiyn-ovoo open-cast copper mine) in Bulgan Province (length about 170 km.); from Maan't to Baga nuur coal-mine south-east of Ulan Bator (about 120 km.).

Eastern Railway: Choybalsan; from the Soviet frontier at Borzya/Ereentsav to Choybalsan (length 237 km.).

Mongolia's railways account for over 75 per cent of total freight turnover.

ROADS

Main roads link Ulan Bator with the Chinese frontier at Dzamyn üüd/Erhlien and with the Soviet frontier at Altanbulag/Kyakhta. A road from Chita in the U.S.S.R. crosses the frontier in the east at Mangut/Onon (Öldziy) and branches for Choybalsan and Öndörhaan. In the west and north-west, roads from Biysk and Irkutsk in the U.S.S.R. go to Tsagaannuur, Bayan-ölgii Aymag, and Hanh, on Lake Hövsgöl, respectively. The total length of these and other main roads is about 8,600 km. The length of asphalted roads is now approaching 1,600 km., almost entirely in towns. The first section of a hard-surfaced road between Ulan Bator and Bayanhongor was completed in 1975. The road from Darhan to Erdenet is also to be surfaced. Inter-provincial and intra-provincial traffic goes across country in most cases.

There are bus services in Ulan Bator and other large towns, and lorry services throughout the country on the basis of motor transport depots, mostly situated in provincial centres.

MONGOLIA

INLAND WATERWAYS

Water transport plies Lake Hövsgöl and the River Selenge (474 km. navigable) in the northern part of the country. Tugs and barges on Lake Hövsgöl transport goods brought in by road to Hanh from the U.S.S.R. to Hatgal on the southern shore.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mongolian Civil Air Transport (MIAT): Ulan Bator; f. 1956; internal services to most provincial centres and many county centres; service from Ulan Bator (Buyant-Uhaa) to Irkutsk; fleet: of 20 An-24, three Il-14, and

Transport, Tourism

There were 8,000 foreign tourists in 1981.

MOROCCO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Morocco is situated in the extreme north-west of Africa. It is bordered by Algeria to the east and by Mauritania and the disputed territory of Western Sahara to the south. The climate is warm and sunny on the coast, while the plains of the interior are intensely hot in summer. Average temperatures are 27°C (81°F) in summer and 7°C (45°F) in winter for Rabat, and 38°C (101°F) and 4°C (40°F) respectively for Marrakesh. The rainy season in the north is from November to April. The official language is Arabic, but a large minority speak Berber. Spanish is widely spoken in the northern regions and French in the rest of Morocco. The established religion is Islam, to which most people belong, and there are Christian and Jewish minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red with a five-pointed green star in the centre. The capital is Rabat.

Recent History

Except for its share of the former Spanish Sahara (see below), Morocco was divided in 1912 into a French protectorate and a smaller Spanish protectorate in the north. Tangier became an international zone in 1923. The French protectorate became an independent Sultanate on March 2nd, 1956, and was joined by the Spanish protectorate in April. The Tangier zone was abolished in October 1956. The Sultan was restyled King of Morocco in August 1957. The northern strip of Spanish Sahara was ceded to Morocco in April 1958. King Mohammed V took charge as Prime Minister in May 1960 but died in February 1961 and was succeeded by his son, King Hassan II.

For the first 13 years of his reign, King Hassan's position was unstable. Successive constitutions attempted to establish royal power while satisfying the demands of opposition parties for greater political freedom. In 1964, after considerable unrest, King Hassan assumed full legislative and executive powers. The Spanish enclave of Ifni was ceded to Morocco in June 1969. New constitutions were approved in July 1970 and March 1972. In 1971 and 1972 there were two attempted military coups. However, the King found an issue which united the country: a campaign to annex Spanish Sahara, initiated in July 1974, received active support from all opposition parties. Morocco brought the issue before the International Court of Justice and a mission from the UN Committee on Colonialism was sent to the territory: both favoured self-determination for the territory. In November 1975 Hassan ordered a "Green March" by over 300,000 unarmed Moroccan volunteers to occupy the territory. The marchers barely crossed the border before they were stopped, but on November 14th Spain agreed to hand the territory over to Morocco and Mauritania. Moroccan troops moved into the territory to confront a guerrilla uprising led by the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Sakiet el Hamra y Río de Oro (Polisario), the local Algerian-(and later Libyan-) backed liberation movement, which seeks independence for Western (formerly Spanish) Sahara and which formed the Government-in-exile of the "Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic" (SADR) in Algeria in March 1976. Morocco broke off diplomatic relations with Algeria, but the possibility of full-scale war receded, since Algeria limited itself to providing support and refuge for Polisario guerrillas. In April Morocco and Mauritania agreed on a division of the territory. The Moroccan sector, which included large deposits of phosphates, was annexed as three new provinces centred on El Aaiún, Essmara (formerly Samara) and Boujdour (Bojador).

In June 1977 a new Chamber of Representatives was elected, marking a return to parliamentary democracy after 14 years of direct rule. Supporters of King Hassan's policies won a majority and a Government of National Unity was formed, including representatives of the two strongest parties, Istiqlal and the Mouvement Populaire, in addition to the pro-monarchist Independents.

Guerrilla warfare in the Sahara continued sporadically from 1976 onwards. Moroccan troops were able to inflict heavy casualties and to ensure the security of the major towns but, even with French military aid, they could not prevent constant infiltration, harassment and sabotage, especially of the important conveyor belt linking the Bou Craa mines with the coast. In November 1978 a committee of mediators was set up by the OAU. Although Mauritania appeared willing to accept a referendum leading to some form of federal rule or even complete independence for its half of Western Sahara, King Hassan refused to consider such a course. Within Morocco, the almost universal approval of King Hassan's attitude meant that any concessions on his part would endanger his popularity, even though heavy defence spending was seriously affecting the economy.

In August 1979 Mauritania finally renounced its claim to Saharan territory and signed a peace treaty with Polisario. King Hassan at once claimed and occupied the former Mauritanian share of Western Sahara, designating it a Moroccan province and arranging for it to send three deputies to the Chamber of Representatives. Polisario retaliated by stepping up its raids into Morocco itself. In response to what it appeared to see as a threat to the stability of a moderate pro-Western regime, the U.S.A. agreed to increase its supply of arms to Morocco. However, the inconclusive fighting continued. At the OAU annual summit meeting in July 1980 the SADR applied to join the OAU as a sovereign state: although a majority of members (26 out of 50) recognized Polisario as the Government of Western Sahara, Morocco insisted that a two-thirds majority was needed to confer membership, and threatened to leave the organization if the SADR were admitted. A working committee was set up, and in September proposed a peace plan, to include a ceasefire supervised by a UN peace-keeping force, and a referendum organized by the OAU and UN. While Morocco agreed in principle to these proposals, it refused to negotiate directly with Polisario or to withdraw its troops from the disputed territory. Another major problem was Morocco's insistence that only the 75,000 Western Saharans registered in the 1974 census should be allowed to vote, while Polisario claimed that refugees living in Algeria were also eligible. In August 1981 it was agreed that during the referendum both parties would keep their troops in the territory, but confined to base. In October, however, heavy fighting resumed, with Morocco claiming that Mauritanian soldiers had taken part in a Polisario raid and that guerrilla bases had been set up on Mauritanian territory. Relations between the two countries had already deteriorated over alleged Moroccan involvement in the attempted coup in Mauritania in March 1981.

At home, drastic price rises for staple foods had sparked off strikes and rioting in June, and several trade union and political leaders were arrested for opposing government policy. In a November reshuffle the Rassemblement National des Indépendants was excluded from the Cabinet.

Government

The 1972 Constitution provides for a modified constitutional monarchy. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral Chamber of Representatives, whose members are elected for six years (two-thirds by direct universal adult suffrage and one-third by an electoral college). Executive power is vested in the King, who appoints (and may dismiss) the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet. The King may also dissolve the Chamber.

Defence

In July 1981 Morocco had an army of 107,000, a navy of 5,000 and an air force of 8,000 men. There is obligatory military service of 18 months. Defence expenditure in 1981 totalled 4,700 million dirhams.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture and mining are the mainstays of the economy. The chief crops are wheat, barley, maize, citrus fruits and vegetables. Although citrus fruits and tomatoes form a major source of export earnings, the country is not self-sufficient in cereals, sugar and other foodstuffs. Agriculture and fishing are high priorities in the 1981-85 development plan and livestock-raising is important. However, severe drought in 1981 destroyed one-third of the grain crop and much of the livestock was lost. The most important mineral extracted is phosphate rock, of which Morocco is by far the world's leading exporter. Plans to increase phosphate processing within Morocco include the construction of three phosphoric acid plants and the opening of a new mine at Sidi Hajjaj under the 1981-85 plan. Extraction of uranium as a by-product was expected to begin in 1983. Other deposits include iron ore, coal, lead, zinc, cobalt, copper and manganese, while contracts for the production of shale oil were signed in 1981. A major natural gas find was announced in January 1982, and all other energy sources were to be developed. Industry is still on a small scale but production was expected to increase by 8.5 per cent annually in 1981-85. Food-processing, textiles and leather manufacturing are the chief industries.

There are still great inequalities of wealth in Moroccan society. There is a serious unemployment problem, especially in the countryside, resulting in a drift to the towns. The emigration of workers is encouraged, the money they earn abroad being an important source of income for the country. Tourism is also a valuable sector of the economy, providing revenue of 1,800 million dirhams in 1979.

There has been a considerable increase in the price of imported capital goods and energy, the latter accounting for a third of total import values in 1981. Revenue from the export of phosphates was affected by the decline in world demand in 1976-79, while Morocco's exports of vegetables and clothing have fallen as a result of restrictions imposed by the EEC. By 1981 fuel imports outvalued phosphate exports, despite improved prices for the latter. National security and defence are absorbing an increasing proportion of the national income as the war in Western Sahara continues. As a result of these extra demands on the economy, a three-year "stabilization" plan was launched in 1978, to reduce foreign debt, cut the trade deficit and encourage private investment. Much excess spending was curbed, G.D.P. rose by 3.2 per cent in 1979 and 6 per cent in 1980, while the 1981-85 plan aimed for an annual increase of 6.5 per cent. The plan involves investment of 111,000 million dirhams and aims to curb imports and boost exports and industrial investment.

In October 1980 the IMF granted a stand-by credit of SDR 810 million ($1,228 million) to alleviate Morocco's balance of payments difficulties. Morocco receives aid from Saudi Arabia and other Middle Eastern countries, the U.S.A. and members of the EEC, especially France. In spite of its pro-Western stance, it has important commercial links with the U.S.S.R.

Transport and Communications

There are 1,756 km. of railway, of which 708 km. are electrified. In 1980 there were about 25,360 km. of surfaced roads out of a total road length of 57,634 km. The chief ports are Casablanca, Safi and Mohammedia; work on Morocco's first deep-water port was begun at Mohammedia in 1980. There are nine international airports and about 30 airfields.

Social Welfare

All employees are required to contribute to a Social Welfare Fund which provides against illness, occupational accidents and old age. In 1978 Morocco had 161 hospitals, with 31,900 beds, and 3,868 physicians.

Education

There are state primary, secondary and technical schools and also private schools. All primary school teachers are Moroccan, but about 5,000 secondary school teachers come from France, although teacher-training is expanding, with about 17,800 trainees in 1979/80. Education for both sexes between 7 and 13 years old has been officially compulsory since 1963. In 1980 the estimated enrolment ratio at primary schools was 65 per cent. Girls generally leave school younger than boys and make up a minority of secondary school pupils and 35 per cent of students in higher education. There are six universities, with a total of 74,465 students in 1979/80, and several other institutions for higher education. In 1971 adult illiteracy averaged 78.6 per cent (males 66.4 per cent, females 90.2 per cent).

Tourism

Morocco is famous for a hot and sunny climate, its ancient, walled towns, the modern capital Rabat and the modern port Casablanca, for desert and mountains and Atlantic and Mediterranean resorts. In 1980 there were 1,517,228 visitors, and in 1979 there were about 60,000 hotel beds.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 23rd (Beginning of Ramadan), July 23rd (Eid el Seghir-Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th (Eid el Kebir-Id ul adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), October 28th (Ashoura), November 6th (Anniversary of the Green March), November 18th (Independence Day), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year), March 3rd (Festival of the Throne, anniversary of King Hassan's accession).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 Moroccan francs (centimes) = 1 Moroccan dirham.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 10.188 dirhams;

U.S. $1 = 5.296 dirhams.

*Area figures include 201,240 sq. km. annexed from Western Sahara in 1976 (Boujdour, Essmara and El Aaiún); the Mauritanian portion, about 104,000 sq. km., was claimed by Morocco as the province of Oued Addahab in 1979. Population figures exclude the new Saharan provinces. The estimated population of Western Sahara (including the then Mauritanian-held portion) was 165,000 at July 1st, 1979.

† It was announced in July 1981 that Casablanca was to be divided into five prefectures. Casablanca-Anfa (1,600,000 inhabitants), Hay-Mohamed-Aïn-Sebaa (600,000), Aïn-Chock-Hay-Hassani (500,000), Ben-MSik-Sidi-Othmane (800,000) and Mohamedia (250,000).

FINANCE

100 Moroccan francs (centimes) = 1 Moroccan dirham.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 francs; 1 and 5 dirhams.

Notes: 5, 10, 50 and 100 dirhams.

100 Moroccan dirhams = £9.82 = $18.88.

Note: The dirham was introduced in October 1959, replacing the Moroccan franc (at par with the old French franc until December 1958) at the rate of 1 dirham = 100 francs. At the same time the currency was devalued by 17.0 per cent, with the former exchange rate (U.S. $1 = 420 Moroccan francs) being replaced by a new rate based on a relationship with French currency, initially fixed at 1 French franc = 1.025 Moroccan francs (1 French franc = 1.025 dirhams after the introduction of the new French franc in January 1960). In terms of U.S. currency, the rate was $1 = 5.0605 dirhams (1 dirham = 19.761 U.S. cents), which remained in operation until August 1971, while the relationship to French currency became 1 French franc = 91.111 Moroccan francs after August 1969. From December 1971 to February 1973 the official exchange rate was $1 = 4.661 dirhams (1 dirham = 21.455 U.S. cents). A new par value of $1 = 4.195 dirhams (1 dirham = 23.84 U.S. cents) was established in February 1973 but in March 1973 the French authorities ceased to maintain the franc-dollar rate within previously agreed margins. Morocco maintained a link with the French franc, although the fixed relationship was ended in May 1973. As a result of these changes, the market exchange rate since March 1973 has fluctuated widely above and below the par value, although the latter continued to be the basis for calculating the value of foreign trade transactions until the end of 1974. In June 1978 it was announced that the dirham would be treated as being at par with the French franc for remittances from Moroccan workers in France. The average market rates (dirhams per U.S. dollar) were: 4.5959 in 1972; 4.1069 in 1973; 4.3698 in 1974; 4.0525 in 1975; 4.4193 in 1976; 4.5034 in 1977; 4.1667 in 1978; 3.8991 in 1979; 3.9367 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1 = 12.145 dirhams.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated March 10th, 1972, after having been approved by national referendum.)*

Preamble: The Kingdom of Morocco, a sovereign Muslim State, shall be a part of the Great Maghreb. As an African State one of its aims shall be the realization of African unity. It will adhere to the principles, rights and obligations of those international organizations of which it is a member and will work for the preservation of peace and security in the world.

General Principles: Morocco shall be a constitutional, democratic and social monarchy. Sovereignty shall pertain to the nation and be exercised directly by means of the referendum and indirectly by the constitutional institutions. All Moroccans shall be equal before the law, and all adults shall enjoy equal political rights including the franchise. Freedoms of movement, opinion and speech and the right of assembly shall be guaranteed. Islam shall be the state religion.

The Monarchy: The Crown of Morocco and its attendant constitutional rights shall be hereditary in the line of H.M. King Hassan II, and shall be transmitted to the oldest son, unless during his lifetime the King has appointed as his successor another of his sons. The King is the symbol of unity, guarantees the continuity of the state, and safeguards respect for Islam and the Constitution. The King shall have the power to appoint and dismiss the Prime Minister and Cabinet Ministers and shall preside over the Cabinet. He shall promulgate legislation passed by the Chamber of Representatives and have the power to dissolve the Chamber; is empowered to declare a state of emergency and to initiate revisions to the Constitution. The Sovereign is the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces; makes appointments to civil and military posts; appoints Ambassadors; signs and ratifies treaties; presides over the Council for National Development Planning and the Supreme Judiciary Council; and exercises the right of pardon.

Legislature: This shall consist of a single assembly, the Chamber of Representatives, whose members are to be elected for a six-year term. Two-thirds of the members shall be elected by direct universal suffrage, and one-third by an electoral college composed of councillors in local government and employers' and employees' representatives. The Chamber shall pass legislation, which may be initiated by its members or by the Prime Minister; authorize any declaration of war; and approve any extension beyond thirty days of a state of emergency.

Government: The Government shall be responsible to the King and the Chamber of Representatives and shall ensure the execution of laws. The Prime Minister shall be empowered to initiate legislation and to exercise statutory powers except where these are reserved to the King. He shall put before the Chamber the Government's intended programme and shall be responsible for co-ordinating ministerial work.

The Sadad Tribunals pass judgment, without possibility of appeal, in personal, civil and commercial cases involving up to 300 dirhams. These tribunals also pass judgment, subject to appeal before the Regional Tribunals, in the same cases up to 900 dirhams, in disputes related to the personal and successional statutes of Moroccan Muslims and Jews, and in penal cases involving misdemeanours or infringements of the law.

The Regional Tribunals deal with appeals against judgments made by the Sadad Tribunals; and pass judgment in the first and last resort in cases of personal property of 900 to 1,200 dirhams or property producing a yield of up to 80 dirhams. The Regional Tribunals also pass judgment, subject to appeal before the Court of Appeal, in actions brought against public administrations in administrative affairs, and in cases of minor offences in penal matters.

Labour Tribunals settle, by means of conciliation, disputes arising from rental contracts or services between employers and employees engaged in private industry. There are 14 labour tribunals in the Kingdom.

A special court was created in 1965 in Rabat to deal with corruption among public officials.

MOZAMBIQUE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Republic of Mozambique lies on the east coast of Africa, bordered to the north by Tanzania, to the west by Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe and to the south by South Africa. The wet season has average temperatures of 28°C (82°F) and the dry season has average temperatures of 18°–20°C (64°–68°F) at Maputo. Portuguese is the official language although tribal dialects, including Ronga, Shangaan and Muchope, are widely spoken. Most of the population follow traditional beliefs, although there are about 2 million Christians, the majority of whom are Roman Catholic, and 2 million Muslims. The national flag features four triangles radiating from a common apex at the upper hoist corner. From the top the stripes, separated by white slivers, are green, red, black and yellow. A white cog-wheel, featuring a hoe, book, rifle and red star, is superimposed in the upper left. The capital is Maputo.

Recent History

Mozambique became a Portuguese colony in the nineteenth century and an overseas province in 1951. Nationalist groups began to form in the 1960s. Frelimo (Frente de Libertação de Moçambique—Mozambique Liberation Front) was formed in 1962 by the merger of three existing nationalist parties. Its military campaign was launched in 1964 and continued until the ceasefire in September 1974. After the coup in Portugal in April 1974, independence negotiations between Frelimo and the new Portuguese government took place. In September agreement was reached and the country was administered by a transitional government composed of representatives of Portugal and Frelimo until independence on June 25th, 1975. Samora Machel, leader of Frelimo since the murder of its founding leader, Eduardo Mondlane, in 1969, became the first President of Mozambique.

Shortly after independence the Government nationalized land, rented property, private law practices, schools, hospitals, banking and insurance without compensation. However, the increasing economic chaos has since caused Mozambique to give guarantees against expropriation to foreign companies.

In December 1975 a revolt by dissident elements of the armed forces and police was put down. The economic crisis has caused discontent and Frelimo has made concerted efforts to secure a political power base outside the areas liberated during Portuguese rule. In 1977 measures were taken to transform the party into a vanguard Marxist-Leninist organization with restricted membership, and People's Assemblies were elected from village to national level. In August 1978 four members of the Frelimo Central Committee were expelled from the party, including Joaquim de Carvalho, Minister for Agriculture, who had failed to give priority to the communal village programme.

In March 1976 the border with Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) was closed, economic sanctions applied and all Rhodesian assets in Mozambique were seized. The country was put on a war footing. In January 1977 President Machel joined the Presidents of the other "front-line" states, in declaring exclusive support for the Patriotic Front. Mozambique was the principal base for Rhodesian guerrillas and large parts of western Mozambique were devastated, with many casualties, by Rhodesian forces' raids on the guerrilla training and refugee camps. The border was reopened in January 1980, following the ceasefire in the guerrilla war, and a plan to repatriate the Rhodesian refugees, thought to number about 50,000, was put into effect.

In 1980 President Machel launched a campaign against inefficiency and corruption in industry, administration and Frelimo itself. Although strongly committed to socialist principles, the Government allows private investors, foreign and domestic, to participate in the country's economy. Private buyers took over many "people's shops" during 1980, in order to increase efficiency. However, this was reversed the following year after fears of a growth in capitalism.

Relations with Portugal deteriorated in 1976, and almost all the 250,000 Portuguese who had remained in the country after independence had left by June 1977. However, some of these have since returned, and relations improved in 1981 when Portugal's President Eanes visited Mozambique. The country's strongest international links are with the U.S.S.R. and other East European countries, and neighbouring African states, an increasing amount of whose trade is expected to pass through the developing ports of Mozambique. Of necessity, close economic relations have been developed with South Africa, although it is alleged that the South African Government seeks every opportunity to destabilize Mozambique. South Africa has inherited Rhodesia's role as supporter of the opposition guerrilla group, the Mozambique National Resistance movement, which is particularly active in central Mozambique around the port of Beira. In 1981 South African forces were involved in two violent incidents inside Mozambique.

Government

The 1975 Constitution proclaims that Frelimo is the directing power of the state and of society. Legislative power is vested in the People's Assembly, with a maximum of 210 members, mostly Frelimo Party officials. The President of the Republic, who is Head of State, is the President of Frelimo. He holds executive power and governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers. The Permanent Commission of the Assembly, chaired by the President, carries out the functions of the Council of Ministers between meetings. A body consisting of four party and state officials is to be appointed within each provincial government, to carry out provincial government functions between meetings. District and city councils are also to be established.

Defence

Military service, which lasts two years, is compulsory for all men and women over the age of 18. In July 1981 the National Defence Force numbered 26,700, with 25,000 in the army, 700 in the navy and 1,000 in the air force. There was also a para-military force of 2,000. A people's organization, Serviço Nacional de Segurança Popular (the National Service of Popular Security), was established to work with the Government and the armed forces on matters of national security. Chinese, Cuban, East German, Romanian and Soviet advisers have been reported in the country. In 1981 defence expenditure totalled 5,600 million meticaís.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on agriculture, which involved about 90 per cent of the working population in 1980, mainly in subsistence farming. The major cash crops are cashew nuts, sugar cane, cotton, tea and sisal. Maize, bananas, rice and coconuts are also grown. In the two years following independence, production of both cereal and cash crops fell drastically. Attempts to improve agricultural production, including a government scheme to resettle peasants in communal villages, have been hampered by a lack of skilled manpower and adverse weather conditions. Maize production is insufficient to meet domestic needs and about 300,000 metric tons of imports were required in both 1980 and 1981, mainly from South Africa and Zimbabwe. Since 1976 over 1,500 communal villages have been established and state farms set up in the effort to "socialize" the rural sector. The state farms, most of which were formerly Portuguese-owned, are to give 50 per cent of their profits to the Government. By 1980 165 agricultural co-operatives, with a total membership of 13,000, had also been established.

Fishing has traditionally been only a minor element in the economy but prawns became the second largest export commodity in 1980, and it is planned to expand the sector further. In 1977 a national fishing company, EMOPESCA, was set up. In December 1979 EMOPESCA operated 48 fishing vessels, with plans to purchase a further 15.

There are considerable mineral resources, although only coal, diamonds and bauxite are at present exploited. The growth in coal production from Moatize, in Tete province, has been slower than expected because of security and technical problems. Production increased from 155,000 metric tons in 1979 to 405,000 tons in 1980, and is planned to grow to 10 million tons per year by 1990. High-grade iron ore deposits exist in large quantities in the Tete area while gold, emeralds and semi-precious stones have also been discovered in the province. In 1975 the Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa began to mine diamonds in the region. Vast gas reserves were discovered during the 1960s but have yet to be exploited. Exploration for petroleum has been carried out by various foreign companies. Licences for production will be granted only in co-operation with the state-owned Empresa Nacional de Hidrocarbonetos.

Industry is limited and Mozambique is heavily dependent on South African industrial products. Food processing forms the basis of this sector, with sugar refining, cashew- and wheat-processing predominating. Other industries include cotton spinning and weaving, brewing and the manufacture of cement and fertilizers.

After independence agricultural and industrial production fell by between 50 and 75 per cent, and recovery has been slow because of the disruption of the Rhodesian war and later guerrilla activities, adverse weather conditions and a critical shortage of foreign exchange. Mozambique's ports and railways provide a vital link in the transport system of southern and central Africa. Traffic was greatly reduced during the Rhodesian war, causing both a serious loss in revenue and shortages in food and industrial supplies. Rail links were re-established with Zimbabwe in January 1980, but are still subject to sabotage. The members of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference hope to use Mozambique's transport facilities to reduce the region's dependence on South Africa, and 40 per cent of planned development projects are in Mozambique.

Mozambique's severe balance of payments problem (the deficit was estimated at 10,300 million meticaís in 1980) has been accentuated by high defence spending, amounting to 30 per cent of budget expenditure in 1981, much of it in already scarce foreign exchange, and by the drastic decline in tourism. A traditional source of foreign exchange was gold, fixed at a low rate, sent as part payment for Mozambican miners in South Africa; this arrangement was terminated in 1978. The employment of Mozambicans in South African mines also declined from a pre-independence peak of 118,000 to about 42,000 in 1980, creating a major unemployment problem.

An ambitious 10-year plan for the 1980s will leave the country heavily reliant on agriculture, but with a far greater degree of mechanization. Mining and heavy industry are also set for major development, aided by the construction of a national electricity grid stemming from the Cabora Bassa dam power complex. In 1981 virtually all of Cabora Bassa's output was still being sold to South Africa at the concessionary rate arranged by the Portuguese. Further developments are planned from which electricity exports would be linked to the price of oil, and provide a major new source of foreign exchange earnings.

Improved conditions for transport in southern Africa should attract much trade to Mozambican ports. Mozambique joined the African Development Bank in 1980, but this is the only major financial grouping to which the country belongs. Negotiations concerning possible membership of the CMEA have taken place, but Mozambique is reluctant to join any organization which would interfere with its internal affairs.

Transport and Communications

In 1981 there were 3,843 km. of state-owned railways. There are rail links between Mozambican ports and South Africa, Zimbabwe and Malawi, plus internal routes. The country lacks a good road system, with only 39,173 km. of roads and tracks in 1974. However, in the north improvements to the network have been made. Efforts are to be made to improve north-south road connections and there are plans to link Mozambique with Tanzania by building a bridge over the Ruvuma River. The main ports are Maputo, the second largest port in Africa, Beira, Nacala and Quelimane. The port of Inhambane was reopened in 1980 after a 20-year closure. A cargo terminal at Moatize was opened in 1976 to link the port of Beira to Zambia and Zaire and handle goods for these countries. Air transport is operated by the state-owned LAM. There are 16 airports, three of which are international airports.

Social Welfare

Most white medical personnel have left, leaving only about 100 physicians for a population of 9 million in late 1975. Some medical assistance is given by Zambia, and in

MOZAMBIQUE

Introductory Survey, Statistical Survey

1979 Mozambique signed a health co-operation agreement with Lesotho. Health services have been nationalized and an emergency medical plan, to cost $22 million, has been drawn up. It gives priority to medical training. As part of a ten-year campaign against tetanus, smallpox and tuberculosis, three million people had been vaccinated by 1977. A serious outbreak of cholera in Maputo in 1980 was well handled by the health services.

Education

About 85 per cent of the adult population are illiterate. There is a major emphasis on campaigns for adult literacy, about 500,000 attending classes in 1980, as well as on widening the scope of primary and secondary schooling. In 1980 there were almost 1.4 million primary school pupils, and over 100,000 secondary school pupils. There is a university at Maputo, renamed the Eduardo Mondlane University in 1976. All university students must give as many years of public service as time spent at university.

Tourism

There were almost 70,000 tourists in 1974 and tourism was formerly a considerable foreign exchange earner. Following independence, tourist entries ceased completely, and were only resumed on a limited scale in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Workers' Day), June 25th (Independence Day), September 25th (Anniversary of the opening of the Armed Struggle).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 3rd (Heroes' Day, anniversary of the assassination of Eduardo Mondlane).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the People's Republic of Mozambique was approved by the Central Committee of Frelimo on June 20th, 1975, and came into force at independence on June 25th, 1975. It was revised in 1978 and subsequent legislation made provision for the conduct of elections. The following summary includes the most important articles of the Constitution (including the subsequent electoral law):

Section I: General Principles

1. The People's Republic of Mozambique is a sovereign, independent and democratic State.
2. Power belongs to the workers and peasants united and led by Frelimo and is exercised by the organs of people's power.
3. Frelimo is the leading force of the State and Society.

4. The Republic has the following fundamental objectives:

The elimination of colonial and traditional structures;
the extension of people's democratic power;
the building of an independent economy;
the defence and consolidation of national independence and unity;
the building of people's democracy and the material and ideological base of a socialist society;
the pursuit of the struggle against colonialism and imperialism.

5. The Mozambique People's Liberation Forces (FPLM) are responsible for national defence. Its Commander-in-Chief is the President of Frelimo.

8. The land and the natural resources of the soil and subsoil, of the territorial waters and continental shelf of Mozambique are the property of the State.
10. The State economic sector is the leading and driving factor in the national economy.
11. The State encourages individual peasants and workers to organize themselves in collective forms of production.
- 12-14. Personal property is guaranteed and foreign capital shall be authorized to operate within the framework of the State's economic policy.
19. The Republic is a secular State in which there is absolute separation between the State and religious institutions.

Section II: Fundamental rights and duties of citizens

26. All citizens enjoy the same rights and are subject to the same duties, irrespective of colour, race, sex, ethnic origin, place of birth, religion, level of education, social position or occupation.
27. In realizing the objectives of the Constitution, all citizens enjoy freedom of opinion, assembly and association.
28. All citizens over 18 years of age are entitled to vote and be elected.
30. Active participation in the defence of the country and the Revolution is the right and supreme duty of every citizen.
33. Individual freedoms are guaranteed by the State, including the freedom to practise or not to practise a religion.
35. The State guarantees accused persons the right to a legal defence.

Section III: State Organs

Chapter I: Principles

State organs are directed by Frelimo on the principle of democratic centralism. Lower-level assemblies are responsible to higher state organs.

Chapter II: Central state organs

43. The People's Assembly is the supreme organ of the State. It expresses the will of the people and realizes the aim of the Republic as defined by Frelimo.
47. The Assembly is convened and presided over by the President of the Republic. It meets in ordinary sessions twice a year and in extraordinary session when requested by the Central Committee, the President, the Permanent Commission of the Assembly or by at least one-third of the members of the Assembly.
48. The Assembly may deliberate only when a majority of its members are present, and decisions are made by majority vote.
50. The Permanent Commission of the Assembly consists of members elected by the Assembly from among its members on the proposal of the Central Committee, and is summoned and chaired by the President.
- 51-52. The Permanent Commission assumes the functions of the Assembly in the periods between meetings of that body, and is answerable to the Assembly.

54-57. The President of the People's Republic of Mozambique is the President of Frelimo and the Head of State. His function is to create ministries and define their jurisdiction; to direct the activities of the Council of Ministers and preside over its meetings; to appoint and dismiss members of the Council of Ministers, the President and Vice-President of the Supreme People's Court and the Attorney-General of the Republic, provincial governors, the governor and deputy governor of the Bank of Mozambique, the general commander and deputy general commander of the Police Corps, the rector of the University, Secretaries of State, the director of the National Service of People's Security and diplomatic representatives of the Republic in other countries; to promulgate and have issued laws and legislative decrees; to declare a state of war and conclude peace treaties by decision of the Central Committee of Frelimo; to proclaim mobilization; to accredit diplomatic representatives of other countries. In the event of the President's death, resignation or permanent incapacity his functions shall be immediately assumed by Frelimo's Central Committee who shall nominate a new President.

58-62. The Council of Ministers is the Government of the Republic and is presided over by the President of the Republic. It is answerable to the Assembly and must comply with resolutions of the Assembly and its Permanent Commission and decisions of the President of the Republic.

Chapter III: Local state organs

63-68. The Republic is administered in provinces, districts, cities and localities. The highest State organ in a province is the Provincial Government presided over by the governor, who is answerable to Frelimo and the Central Government. There shall be assemblies at each administrative level.

Chapter IV: Judiciary

69. Judicial functions shall be exercised through the Supreme People's Court and other courts provided for in the law on the judiciary, which also subordinates them to the People's Assembly.
70. Courts must safeguard the principles of the constitution and defend the rights and legitimate interests of citizens.
73. Judges are independent, subject only to the law.

Section IV: Symbols of the People's Republic of Mozambique

Section V: Final and transitional provisions

79. All previous legislation contrary to the Constitution is automatically revoked.

Conduct of Elections

Elections to assemblies at the locality, district, provincial and national levels were held between September 25th and December 4th, 1977, under the control of Frelimo and on the basis of universal franchise for all citizens over 18 (with certain exceptions). These elections were conducted in accordance with the electoral law adopted at the first meeting of the People's Assembly, held with a provisional membership in August 1977.

LEGISLATURE

ASSEMBLEIA POPULAR

The 210-member People's Assembly comprises the Central Committee of Frelimo, the Executive Committee, the Permanent Commission, ministers and vice-ministers, provincial governors, representatives of the armed forces, representatives from each of the provinces and ten other citizens. It was elected on December 1st to 4th, 1977.

POLITICAL PARTY

Frelimo Party: Maputo; Pres. SAMORA MACHEL; Sec. for Economic Affairs MARCELINO DOS SANTOS; Sec. for Ideological Affairs JORGE REBELO; Sec. for Foreign Relations JOAQUIM CHISSANO; Sec. for Party Organization OSCAR MONTEIRO.

Frelimo was formed in 1962 as the Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (Mozambique Liberation Front) by the merger of three existing nationalist parties: the União Democrática Nacional de Moçambique (UDENAMO), f. 1960; the Mozambique African Nationalist Union (MANU), f. 1961; and the União Africana de Moçambique Independente (UNAMI). The first President and Vice-President of Frelimo were Dr. Eduardo Mondlane and Uriah Simango.

At its third Congress held in Maputo in February 1977, Frelimo was designated a Marxist-Leninist vanguard party, but retained its original name for historical reasons. A new 67-member Central Committee, a four-member secretariat and a 10-man permanent political committee were elected.

Movimento Nacional da Resistência de Moçambique (MNR) (Mozambique National Resistance): Leader AFONSO DLAKAMA. Opposition guerrilla group, thought to be financed by dispossessed Portuguese business interests. Operates Voz da África Livre radio broadcasts from South Africa.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

In May 1978 it was announced that pilot tribunals were to be established in each province by People's Tribunal Brigades. A Revolutionary Military Tribunal was created in March 1979 to try breaches of the Security Laws.

People's Courts are being set up at all administrative levels.

RELIGION

Most of the population follow traditional beliefs, but there are about 2,000,000 Muslims and 2,000,000 Christians (1,592,000 Roman Catholics in 1978) and a smaller Hindu community.

NAMIBIA

(SOUTH WEST AFRICA)

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Capital

Namibia lies in south-west Africa, with South Africa to the south and south-east, Botswana to the east and Angola to the north. The narrow Caprivi Strip between Angola and Botswana in the north-east extends Namibia to the Zambezi river, giving it a border with Zambia. The coastal areas have mild temperatures though the territory is subject to droughts and unreliable rainfall, and includes the Namib Desert. The official languages are Afrikaans and English, although German is widely used and most African ethnic groups have their own language. Most Europeans and substantial numbers of the African and "Coloured" communities are Christians. The capital is Windhoek.

Recent History

South West Africa became a German possession in 1884. The territory excluded a small area around the port of Walvis Bay, previously annexed by the United Kingdom and subsequently incorporated in South Africa. In 1914, when the First World War broke out, South African forces occupied South West Africa, and in 1915 the Germans surrendered the territory. In 1920 the League of Nations entrusted South Africa with a mandate to administer South West Africa. In 1925 South Africa granted a constitution giving limited self-government to European inhabitants only. No trusteeship agreement was concluded with the UN after the Second World War and in 1946 the UN refused South Africa's request for permission to annex South West Africa. In 1949 the whites were given representation in the South African Parliament. In 1950 the International Court of Justice (ICJ) held that the area was still under an international mandate and that South Africa should submit it to the control of the UN. South Africa refused to comply with this judgment. In October 1966 South Africa's security and apartheid laws were extended to South West Africa, retrospective to 1950.

Within South West Africa there was opposition to South Africa's policies of racial segregation, land appropriation, the contract labour system and restrictions on Africans' freedom of movement. These grievances led to the establishment of the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) in 1958 and the South West Africa National Union (SWANU) in 1959. These groups campaigned for an end to racial discrimination and for progress to full independence from South Africa. In October 1966 SWAPO announced that it would launch an armed struggle for the liberation of the territory.

SWAPO had a legal wing which was tolerated in Namibia, but repeated harassment led to the closure of the movement's offices at Windhoek and the dissolution of its executive council in June 1979. The exiled wing is led by the SWAPO President, Sam Nujoma, and controls the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN), whose guerrilla activities, operating from bases in Angola and Zambia, have steadily increased since its first operations in the 1960s. Plans for a demilitarized zone along the Angola/Namibia border collapsed in 1980 when South Africa refused to allow SWAPO to operate bases in such a zone. Conflict between PLAN and South African forces increased during 1980 and 1981, with South Africa launching several invasions of southern Angola in an attempt to destroy SWAPO's operational bases.

The interpretations of South Africa's obligations have been the subject of repeated controversy, and South Africa has been consistently criticized at the UN over its extension of apartheid to the territory. The UN General Assembly voted to terminate South Africa's mandate in October 1966, set up a UN Council for South West Africa in May 1967, and changed the name of the territory to Namibia in June 1968. The ICJ considered the dispute five times and in 1971 South Africa's presence was ruled illegal.

In 1972 the UN Security Council initiated contacts with South Africa in an attempt to resolve the deadlock over Namibia. These were abandoned in December 1973 and the Security Council ended contact with South Africa. At the same time the UN General Assembly recognized SWAPO as "the authentic representative of the Namibian people" and appointed the first UN Commissioner for Namibia to carry out "executive and administrative tasks".

During 1973 and 1974 South Africa became more flexible, influenced by events in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and in the former Portuguese territories of Angola and Mozambique. The South African Prime Minister, B. J. Vorster, tried to create a multi-racial Advisory Council for the territory but it was boycotted by SWAPO and most influential Africans. In November 1974 the all-white South West Africa Legislative Assembly organized a multiracial constitutional conference on the territory's future which began at the Turnhalle in Windhoek in September 1975, attended by 134 delegates representing the territory's eleven main ethnic groups. Neither the UN nor the Organization of African Unity (OAU) recognized the conference, owing to its ethnic and non-democratic basis. Although invited, the legal wing of SWAPO refused to attend the conference, declaring that it would negotiate for Namibian independence directly with South Africa only after several preconditions, including the withdrawal of South African armed forces and the release of political prisoners, had been met. In January 1976 the UN Security Council again ordered South Africa to withdraw its forces from Namibia and allow free elections.

In August 1976 the constitutional committee of the Turnhalle conference announced December 31st, 1978, as a target date for Namibian independence, that it should be a unitary state (a point previously resisted by the white delegates) and that an interim government was to be formed as soon as a constitution had been drafted. These proposals received South African backing but were rejected by SWAPO, the UN and the OAU, which stated that SWAPO was entitled to foreign military assistance in its struggle to liberate Namibia. In December the UN Committee on the Ending of Colonialism declared its support for the guerrilla war.

In March 1977 the Turnhalle conference agreed on a draft constitution for an interim government pending the granting of independence by South Africa in December 1978. After endorsement in May 1977 by 95 per cent of voters in a whites-only referendum, the proposals were dropped in June 1977 following pressure from the UN Security Council. In September 1977 South Africa appointed an Administrator-General (see below) to govern the territory and promised that free elections would be held in 1978. Early in 1978 talks were held between South Africa, SWAPO and the five Western members of the Security Council. In March the Western powers presented proposals for an internationally recognized Namibian settlement, including the holding of UN-supervised elections, the reduction in the numbers of South African troops in Namibia and the release of political prisoners. These proposals, conditionally accepted by both South Africa and SWAPO, became enshrined in Security Council Resolution 435 in September.

However, South Africa pressed forward with its own internal solution by holding elections for a Namibian Constituent Assembly in December. The election, regarded by the Western powers as invalid, was contested by five parties, but boycotted by SWAPO, the SWAPO-Democrats and the Namibian National Front. Of the 50 seats in the Assembly, 41 went to the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance (DTA), a coalition of 11 conservative bodies representing various ethnic groups. In May 1979 South Africa unilaterally established a legislative Namibian National Assembly, without executive powers, from the existing Constituent Assembly. The DTA was seriously weakened in February 1982 by the resignation of its President, Peter Kalangua, and his powerful Ovambo-backed National Democratic Party.

An attempt to establish a demilitarized zone along the Angola/Namibia border faltered in 1980 when South Africa refused to allow SWAPO to maintain bases in such a zone. The UN succeeded in bringing all parties to a conference at Geneva in January 1981, but negotiations to reach a ceasefire and proceed to UN-supervised elections broke down over what South Africa interpreted as the UN's pro-SWAPO bias. Meanwhile, South Africa continued to develop internal governmental institutions and extended the executive powers of the interim legislature in pursuit of an internal settlement. Later in 1981 the Western powers sought agreement from the Namibian parties and African nations concerned to commence a three-phase independence plan, which would give constitutional guarantees to minority groups in Namibia within the framework of Resolution 435. It was hoped that Namibia would become independent by early 1983.

Government

In September 1977 the South African Government appointed an Administrator-General with executive authority. A 12-member Ministerial Council was formed in July 1980. In September 1981 the Council was increased to 15 and given executive authority over all matters except constitutional, security and foreign affairs. The Chairman of the Ministerial Council is elected by the National Assembly and then appoints 14 other members, subject to ratification by the Assembly, who represent the various ethnic groups. The National Assembly has 72 members; 50 elected and 22 nominated by 11 ethnic representative bodies. Elections for 11 "second-tier" legislative assemblies, according to ethnic group, were held in November 1980. No poll was held in the Ovambo region, where 47 per cent of the population lives, because of the guerrilla war.

Defence

In 1981 there were an estimated 50,000 South African, and South African-trained troops stationed in the territory. The South African Government transferred some of its responsibility for defence to the Namibian National Assembly in 1980 and a South West Africa Territory force was established.

Economic Affairs

Namibia is rich in minerals, particularly diamonds, uranium, copper, lead, zinc, tin, lithium, manganese, silver, tungsten, cadmium and vanadium, and the country is Africa's fourth largest mineral exporter. In 1980 mining accounted for 49 per cent of G.D.P. Namibia has the world's richest alluvial deposits of gem diamonds, and of the 1.6 million carats produced in 1980, a very high proportion were of gem quality. Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, the world's largest producer of gem diamonds, is based in Namibia. The huge, although low-grade, uranium mine at Rössing is being jointly developed by the South African Industrial Development Corporation and the British company Rio Tinto-Zinc. The mine produced about 5,200 metric tons in 1980. General Mining's Langer Heinrich uranium project, 80 km. south of Rössing, is awaiting development. Its ore deposits, although smaller than Rössing's, are believed to be of better quality. Copper, lead and zinc are mined by the U.S.-owned Tsumeb Corporation, although, with the exception of copper and lead, all minerals are processed outside Namibia. The total value of mining output increased from R105 million in 1970 to R600 million in 1979.

The Ruacana hydroelectric scheme, developed jointly with Angola, is crucial to the prospects of the mining industry. The first stage of the scheme became operational in 1977, although it will not reach full capacity until the Angolan Government agrees to allow diversion of part of the Cunene river through the power plant.

The fishing industry was formerly second in importance to mining, based on large reserves of pilchards. However, stringent restrictions have been in force since 1978, following serious overfishing by foreign trawlers. Landings of pilchard fell catastrophically from 545,000 metric tons in 1975 to 15,000 tons in 1980. Revenue from the export of canned pilchards fell from R50 million in 1976 to virtually nothing in 1978. The decline in the pilchard catch has been partially compensated for by expanding white fish landings, which doubled to 25,000 tons in 1981. In November 1979 Namibia's territorial waters were extended to 200 nautical miles (370 km.) as a further protection against overfishing.

The major agricultural industries are the processing of meat and livestock products. Beef accounts for 50 per cent, karakul pelts 33 per cent, and mutton and pork 15 per cent of revenue from agriculture. Crops produced include maize, millet and groundnuts. Agriculture has suffered from a drought which started in 1978, and from a decline in prices for karakul pelts. The combined share of agriculture and fishing in G.D.P. declined from 19.2 per cent in 1975 to 12.2 per cent in 1980. Manufacturing output is negligible, although there are some general engineering units and several factories in the country, including one producing paint and another retreading tyres.

The real growth rate in G.D.P. for 1970-79 was an average of 6 per cent per annum, and G.D.P. was estimated at R1,200 million in 1979. In 1981 tax rates 25 per cent lower than the equivalent rates in South Africa were introduced for foreign investors. In 1981 the top rate for personal income tax was also reduced, from 50 per cent to 39 per cent, and the tax extended to cover all inhabitants of appropriate income. The South African Government subsidized R80 million directly to the budget deficit of R376 million in 1981. South Africa spent a further R300 million on Namibia in 1981 for security, guarantees for loans and drought relief. South Africa is the country's major supplier of consumer goods and takes around 50 per cent of Namibia's exports.

Transport and Communications

Since 1969 South Africa has increased expenditure on roads and railways and joint hydroelectric development schemes, initially with Portugal but since 1975 with Angola. There are about 37,000 km. of roads. Most improvements are concentrated on benefiting the southern, white-occupied zone. The Port of Walvis Bay, the possession of which is disputed by South Africa and Namibia, is linked to the main overseas shipping routes. There is an alternative harbour at Lüderitz.

Social Welfare

In 1973 there were 66 hospital establishments with 6,905 beds.

Education

The South African Government took control of education in 1921. A large-scale education development plan began only after 1964 with a Five-Year Plan in accordance with the Bantu Education Act of 1953. Education is based on apartheid, with separate facilities for different ethnic groups. In 1978 it was estimated that 65 per cent of adult black Namibians were illiterate. The South African Government forced the closure of over 170 independent church schools between 1922 and 1973.

Tourism

The Etosha Pan, one of the finest game reserves in Africa, attracts many tourists. In 1972 an estimated 250,000 tourists visited Namibia.

NAURU

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag

The Republic of Nauru is a small island in the Central Pacific, lying about 41 km. south of the Equator and about 4,000 km. north-east of Sydney, Australia. Its nearest neighbour is Banaba (Ocean Island), in Kiribati, about 300 km. to the east. The climate is tropical, with a westerly monsoon season from November to February. The average annual rainfall is 45.5 cm., but actual rainfall is extremely variable. About half the population are Nauruans. Their language is Nauruan but English is widely understood. Most Nauruans belong to the Nauruan Protestant Church. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is blue, divided by a horizontal gold bar, with a 12-pointed white star at the lower left.

Recent History

Nauru was annexed by Germany in 1888. In 1914, shortly after the outbreak of the First World War, the island was captured by Australian forces. It continued to be administered by Australia under a League of Nations mandate (granted in 1920) which also named the United Kingdom and New Zealand as co-trustees. Between 1942 and 1945 Nauru was occupied by the Japanese. In 1947 the island was placed under United Nations Trusteeship, with Australia as the administering power on behalf of the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. The UN Trusteeship Council proposed in 1964 that the indigenous people of Nauru be resettled on Curtis Island, off the Queensland coast. This offer was made in anticipation of the progressive exhaustion of the island's phosphate deposits. The Nauruans elected to remain on the island, and studies were put in train in 1966 for the shipping of soil to the island to replace the phosphate rock. Nauru received a considerable measure of self-government in January 1966, with the establishment of Legislative and Executive Councils, and proceeded to independence on January 31st, 1968. Nauru is a "special member" of the Commonwealth but is not represented at meetings of Heads of Government.

The Head Chief of Nauru, Hammer DeRoburt, was elected President in May 1968 and re-elected in 1971 and 1973. Dissatisfaction with his increasingly personal rule led to the Parliamentary election of a new President, Bernard Dowiyogo, in December 1976 and the formation of a new Cabinet. In 1977 the Opposition, led by Hammer DeRoburt, unsuccessfully challenged the legality of a controversial Supply Act passed in June. The Government later resigned, and a general election was held in November 1977. Bernard Dowiyogo's Nauru Party was returned with a small majority, and he was re-elected President. Chief Hammer DeRoburt's supporters, however, forced Dowiyogo to resign in April 1978 by defeating a bill concerning phosphate royalties. Lagumot Harris succeeded him but resigned three weeks later, when Parliament rejected the finance bill and Chief Hammer DeRoburt was again elected President. He was re-elected in December 1980.

Government

Legislative power is held by a unicameral Parliament, with 18 members elected by universal adult suffrage for up to three years. Executive power is held by the President, who is elected by Parliament for its duration and governs with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet, responsible to Parliament.

Economic Affairs

The island's economy is based on the extraction of phosphate rock, derived from rich deposits of guano. Phosphate mining is manned largely by indentured labour. About four-fifths of the area is phosphate-bearing rock but exports fell from 2.3 million metric tons in 1972/73 to 755,000 tons in 1975/76, recovering to 1.1 million tons in 1976/77 and almost 2 million tons in 1977/78. Phosphate deposits are expected to be exhausted by 1995, by which time, it is hoped, Nauru will be able to derive economic security from its shipping and civil aviation services and from its proposed role as a tax haven for international business. Plans to set up a fisheries industry began to take effect in 1979, when the Nauru Local Government Council acquired two fishing vessels.

The revenue from phosphate sales is shared between the Government (which takes about half the profits), the Nauruan landowners, a royalties long-term trust fund and the Nauru Local Government Council. Under the latter's auspices, the Government opened a 53-storey office block in Melbourne in 1977 and has built a $A7 million complex in the U.S.-administered Northern Mariana Islands as capital investment.

Social Welfare

The Government maintains a comprehensive social welfare system which provides housing and free medical treatment for all citizens. There are two hospitals.

Education

Education is free and compulsory for Nauruan children between the ages of 6 and 16. In 1975 there were six infant schools, three primary schools and two secondary schools, with 1,501 pupils at primary level and 472 at secondary level. Local teacher training is supplemented by cadetships in Australia, and in 1975 there were approximately 130 teachers on the island.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated in 1968)

The Constitution protects the fundamental rights and freedoms and provides for a Cabinet responsible to a popularly elected Parliament. The President of the Republic is elected by Parliament from among its members. The Cabinet is composed of five or six members including the President, who presides. There are 18 members of Parliament, including the Cabinet. Voting is compulsory for those over 20 years of age, except in certain specified instances.

The highest judicial organ is the Supreme Court and there is provision for the setting up of subordinate courts with designated jurisdiction.

There is a Treasury Fund from which monies may be taken by Appropriation Acts.

A Public Service is provided for with the person designated as the Chief Secretary being the Commissioner of the Public Service.

Special mention is given to the allocation of profits and royalties from the sale of phosphates.

NEPAL

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Nepal is a landlocked country in the Himalaya mountain range, between India to the east, south and west and the People's Republic of China to the north. The climate varies sharply with altitude. The central Valley of Kathmandu is warm and sunny in summer, with an average annual temperature of 11°C (62°F). Sometimes temperatures fall below zero. The official language is Nepali, spoken by 52 per cent of the population in 1971. Other languages include Maithiri (11.5 per cent) and Bhojpuri (7 per cent). Nearly 90 per cent of the population are Hindus, with 7.5 per cent Buddhists and 3 per cent Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 4) is comprised of two crimson pennants, each with a blue border. The upper section is charged with a white crescent moon and the lower section with a white sun in splendour. The capital is Kathmandu.

Recent History

Nepal is an hereditary monarchy but for more than 100 years, until 1951, effective power was held by the Rana family, who created the post of hereditary Prime Minister. A popular revolution, led by the Nepali Congress, toppled the Ranas and restored King Tribhuvan to power. A limited constitutional monarchy was established in 1951. During most of the 1950s government was controlled by the monarchy, first under Tribhuvan and then, after his death in 1955, under his son, Mahendra. In 1959 King Mahendra promulgated Nepal's first constitution, providing for a bicameral Parliament, including a popularly-elected Lower House. Elections resulted in victory for the Nepali Congress, led by B. P. Koirala, who became Prime Minister.

However, the King retained a certain degree of power and continuing differences between King and Prime Minister led to a royal coup in December 1960. The King dismissed the Cabinet and dissolved Parliament. A royal decree of January 1961 banned political parties. King Mahendra accused the Koirala administration of corruption and in December 1962 he introduced a new constitution, re-asserting royal power and providing for a party-less system of government based on the Panchayat (village council), with a Prime Minister appointed by the King. This office was filled successively by Dr. Tulsī Giri (1962-65), Surya Bahadur Thapa (1965-69) and Kirti Nidhi Bista (1969-70, 1971-73). King Mahendra himself was Prime Minister from April 1970 to April 1971. In January 1972 King Mahendra died and was succeeded by his son Birendra. Nagendra Prasad Rijal became Prime Minister in July 1973, and held office until December 1975, when Dr. Giri was reappointed. The new Government made major changes to the Constitution. In September 1977 Dr. Giri resigned and was succeeded by Bista.

The former Prime Minister and advocate of parliamentary democracy, B. P. Koirala, was acquitted of treason in February 1978. Returning from abroad a year later, he was placed under house arrest in April 1979, but then released, partly to appease students who had been demonstrating for reforms. National unrest grew and, after King Birendra announced in May that there would be a national referendum on whether to restore multi-party democracy, Bista resigned and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Thapa. In the referendum, held in May 1980, 54.8 per cent of the voters supported the Panchayat system with reforms. As a result, the King formed a Constitutional Reforms Commission and in December 1980 a decree was issued amending the Constitution (see Constitution). Under the new provisions, elections were held in May 1981, the first of their kind since 1959, although still on a non-party basis. Despite calls by B. P. Koirala to boycott the polling, 1,096 candidates contested the 112 elective seats in the Rashtriya Panchayat. Only 35 of the 93 pro-Government candidates obtained seats.

Thapa was re-elected by the Rashtriya Panchayat as Prime Minister in June and the King installed a 28-member Council of Ministers.

Nepal has traditionally been very dependent on India, but in 1977 the old Trade and Transit Treaty between the two countries was replaced by two treaties allowing Nepal to develop trade with other countries. The People's Republic of China has contributed a considerable amount to the Nepalese economy, and ties with Bangladesh are also significant.

Government

Nepal is a constitutional monarchy. Executive power is vested in the King, who presides over the unicameral legislature, the Rashtriya Panchayat (National Assembly). Under the Panchayat system, village councils are elected, whose members then elect district councils, whose members elect zonal councils. Under the Constitutional amendments of December 1980, direct elections are to be held every five years for 112 of the 140 seats in the Rashtriya Panchayat and the remaining 28 members are to be nominated by the King. On the recommendation of the Prime Minister, who is elected by the members of the Rashtriya Panchayat, the King appoints the Council of Ministers, which is responsible to the Rashtriya Panchayat. No political parties are allowed. A constitutional body, the Raj Sabha or State Council, was formed in 1975 to watch over political affairs and to propagate Panchayat ideology.

For local administration, Nepal is divided into 14 zones, each headed by an appointed Commissioner.

Defence

In July 1981 Nepal had an army with an estimated 25,000 men. Military service is voluntary. Nepal spent 264.6 million rupees on defence in 1980.

Economic Affairs

Much of the country is heavily forested and too steep for cultivation, yet almost 90 per cent of the labour force are employed in agriculture, which accounts for about 60 per cent of G.D.P. and an estimated 70 per cent of exports. The agricultural settlements are confined to the Kathmandu valley and wider sections of the river valleys. Steps are being taken to develop agriculture, with particular emphasis on irrigation, and, under the sixth Five-Year Plan, nearly a third of projected expenditure is to be invested in agriculture and improved irrigation. In 1979 only 10 per cent of potentially irrigable land had irrigation facilities.

Manufacturing contributes less than 5 per cent of G.D.P. The most important modern industries include brick and tile manufacture, construction materials, paper, food grain processing and vegetable oil extraction, sugar refining and a brewery. According to one estimate, about one million workers are employed in traditional industries such as basket making, cotton fabrics, edible oils, etc.

Mica is mined east of Kathmandu and there are also small deposits of lignite, copper, cobalt and iron ore. Nepal's rivers are being exploited for hydroelectric power production. Two hydroelectric projects are under way, costing more than U.S. $1,000 million in international aid. The projects are expected to become productive in the late 1980s and could also supply all the energy requirements of northern India.

Under the fifth Five-Year Plan (1975-80) new industries were set up, including medicines, textiles, farm tools, and paper and pulp. However, the Plan failed to meet its target of increasing national income by 4-5 per cent a year, and G.D.P. increased at an annual average rate of 2.2 per cent (less than population growth at 2.3 per cent) and actually fell by 1.4 per cent in 1979/80.

The sixth Five-Year Plan (1980-85) envisages a total expenditure of NRs 20,500 million, an increase of almost 80 per cent over the previous Plan. The main emphasis is on agriculture and small-scale and cottage industries, and increased irrigation and hydroelectric power generation. Over 60 per cent of expenditure will be provided by foreign aid from India, the People's Republic of China, the EEC and some of its member countries, Canada, the U.S.A. and Switzerland, plus multilateral aid from international agencies.

In 1979 the trade deficit grew by almost 20 per cent, mainly as a result of a rise in imports. Nepal's major trading partner is India, taking more than 75 per cent of its foreign trade, and almost all Nepal's imports pass through the port of Calcutta. Nepal has established trade links with the People's Republic of China, North Korea, Bangladesh, Egypt and Sri Lanka, but its trade is still largely controlled by India, which persistently withheld transit rights until 1978, when a memorandum of understanding was signed by Bangladesh and India to provide Nepal with overland transit facilities through their respective territories. Following the visit by a Tibetan trade delegation in 1980, 21 trade routes were opened up along the Nepal-Tibetan frontier. In 1981 Nepal and the People's Republic of China signed a new bilateral agreement, replacing a 1974 pact, in an effort to boost two-way trade, which totalled U.S. $20.2 million in 1980/81. Tariffs on several products from China, the U.S.A., the United Kingdom, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of Korea were also relaxed.

Nepal is one of the 25 least developed nations on the World Bank scale. Between 1970 and 1978 the average real growth in Nepal's gross national product per head ($120 in 1978) was only 0.3 per cent annually.

Transport and Communications

There are short sections of motorable roads around Kathmandu and a mountain road links the capital with the Indian railhead at Raxaul. Heavy goods on this route are transported by a 42-km. ropeway from Hetauda to Kathmandu. A number of important new roads have been built, notably that linking Kathmandu and the Tibetan border at Kodari. There are two sections of railway totalling 100 km. Coolies, however, are still the principal means of transport, supplemented by ponies, mules and yaks in the more open upper valleys. A national shipping corporation was set up in 1971. Regular air services link India, Thailand and the larger towns in Nepal. Nepal has telegraph links with both India and Pakistan and in 1980 it was announced that the country's first satellite earth station was to be built, with British help, to provide Nepal with international communications.

Social Welfare

In 1975 hospital beds totalled 1,881, one for every 6,600 of the population, and there was one physician for every 33,000. Under the sixth Five-Year Plan 24.4 per cent of development expenditure was allocated to the social services.

Education

Free primary education for five years was introduced in government schools in 1975, when an estimated 27 per cent of children aged from 6 to 11 were enrolled. It was expected that the proportion would rise to 64 per cent by 1980. In 1979/80 primary school pupils totalled some 1,068,000 and there were about 476,000 pupils at over 3,000 secondary and higher educational establishments in 1978/79. There is one university. In 1979 over 80 per cent of the adult population was illiterate.

Tourism

Tourism is being developed by the construction of new tourist centres in the Kathmandu valley and regular air services link Kathmandu with Pokhara Lake. Major tourist attractions include Lumbini, the birthplace of Buddha, and the Himalaya mountain range, including Mount Everest, the world's highest peak. In 1980 162,897 tourists visited Nepal.

Public Holidays

1982: August/September (Indra Jatra—Festival of Rain God), October, over a week (Dasain—Durga Puja Festival), November, two days (Tihar—Festival of Lights), December 15th (Mahendra Jayanti and Constitution Day), December 28th (King Birendra's Birthday).

1983: February 18th (Tribhuvan Jayanti—Birthday of the late King Tribhuvan—and Rashtriya Prajatantra Divas—National Day), February/March (Shivaratri—in honour of Lord Shiva), April (Navabarsha—New Year's Day), April (Baishakh Purnima—Birthday of Lord Buddha).

Weights and Measures

Nepal uses the Indian system of weights but has other measures of its own. Steps have been taken to introduce the metric system.

FINANCE

100 paisa (pice) = 1 Nepalese rupee (NR).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 25 and 50 paisa; 1 rupee.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 100, 500 and 1,000 rupees.

1,000 Nepalese rupees = £39.39 = $75.76.

Note: Between August 1958 and April 1960 the Nepalese rupee was valued at 14 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 7.143 rupees). In April 1960 the rupee was devalued by 6.25 per cent to 13.125 U.S. cents ($1 = 7.619 rupees) and this valuation remained in force until June 1966. From June 1966 to December 1967 the rupee's value was 13.13 U.S. cents ($1 = 7.616 rupees). Between December 1967 and February 1973 the exchange rate was $1 = 10.125 rupees (1 rupee = 9.8765 U.S. cents). The rate was $1 = 10.56 rupees (1 rupee = 9.47 U.S. cents) from February 1973 to October 1975; $1 = 12.50 rupees (1 rupee = 8 U.S. cents) from October 1975 to March 1978. A new basic rate of $1 = 12.00 rupees (1 rupee = 8.33 U.S. cents) was introduced in March 1978. At the same time a "second" rate, initially set at $1 = 16.00 rupees, was effective for some transactions. The "second" rate was adjusted to $1 = 14.00 rupees in February 1980. The two-tier system was ended in September 1981, when a unified rate of $1 = 13.20 rupees was established. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 21.333 rupees from April 1960 to June 1966; £1 = 21.325 rupees from June 1966 to November 1967; £1 = 24.30 rupees from December 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 26.383 rupees from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated December 1962, amended in 1967, 1976 and 1980)

GOVERNMENT

The Constitution of Nepal comprises a constitutional monarchy with executive power vested in the King but ordinarily exercised on the recommendation of a Cabinet led by a Prime Minister, selected by the King from among the membership of the Rashtriya Panchayat (National Assembly). The Cabinet is responsible to the Rashtriya Panchayat but the King has power to grant or withhold assent to Bills at his discretion.

STATE COUNCIL

The Constitution also provides for a State Council or Raj Sabha which will declare upon the succession or appoint a Regency Council besides giving advice to the King in times of emergency.

LEGISLATURE—RASHTRIYA PANCHAYAT

The Rashtriya Panchayat, which is at the apex of the party-less Panchayat system of democracy, is the supreme national unicameral legislature, comprising 135 members, 112 of whom are elected from among the members of the Anchal Sabhas (Zonal Councils), who in turn are elected from among the members of Zilla Sabhas (District Councils) who, again in turn, are elected from the Gaon Sabhas (Village Councils). In other words, membership of the Rashtriya Panchayat is based on the popular election of Local Panchayat (which is the basic unit of the four-tiered Panchayat system), from each of which members choose from among themselves representatives for District Panchayats. They may advance by similar stages to the zonal and then to the Rashtriya Panchayat. The remaining members are nominated by the Crown according to the Constitution.

The Rashtriya Panchayat is a perpetual body whose members are elected from Zonal Councils and serve a fixed term of four years. House proceedings are open to the public. A summary record of the proceedings of every meeting of the House or its committees is published.

Bills to the House are presented by the Committees of the House, in consultation with Ministers. The annual budget is submitted to the House for consideration, deliberation and adoption. In order that these legislative tasks be conducted with becoming dignity and efficiency, the members of the House fully enjoy the privilege of freedom from arrest for anything spoken in the House or the manner in which voting is exercised.

CITIZENS' RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Besides enumerating a number of fundamental rights, including the right against exile, the Constitution lays down a series of fundamental duties of the citizen.

AMENDMENTS

Amendments to the 1962 Constitution, adopted in 1967 and 1976, include the following: Prime Minister to be appointed by the King who may, if he wishes, consult the Rashtriya Panchayat; Ministers to be collectively and individually responsible to the King; King to appoint directly the Zonal Commissioners who are to enjoy greater powers than the Chairmen of Zonal Panchayat; Speaker of the House to be appointed by at least two-thirds of Rashtriya Panchayat; associations for non-political purposes allowed but political parties continue to be banned; provision for appointment of an independent Election Commission; the country to be divided into four areas for electoral purposes, with elections for all elective bodies every four years on a rotational basis; elected members of Rashtriya Panchayat can be recalled. Following the national referendum of May 1980, the King formed an 11-member Constitutional Reforms Commission to recommend reforms to the system.

Amendments to the Constitution of December 1980: direct elections to be held every five years for 112 of the 140 seats in the Rashtriya Panchayat; the remaining 28 seats to be nominated by the King; the Prime Minister to be elected by members of the Rashtriya Panchayat; the Council of Ministers to be appointed by the King (on the recommendation of the Prime Minister) and to be responsible to the Rashtriya Panchayat; the establishment of Nepal as a "zone of peace" to be included as a directive principle in the Constitution.

LEGISLATURE

RASHTRIYA PANCHAYAT

The Rashtriya Panchayat (National Assembly) is the supreme legislative body of Nepal under the Panchayat system which is presided over by the King (see under Constitution). It has 140 members, of whom 112 are directly elected for 5 years and 28 nominated by the King.

Chairman of the Rashtriya Panchayat: RAM HARI SHARMA.

"BACK TO THE VILLAGE" NATIONAL CAMPAIGN

A constitutional body, formed in December 1975, with responsibility for political affairs and the propagation of Panchayat philosophy. The Central Committee resigned en bloc in June 1979 in preparation for a national referendum on the political system (see Recent History).

POLITICAL PARTIES

Political parties are banned under the Panchayat system.

THE NETHERLANDS ANTILLES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Netherlands Antilles consist of two groups of islands in the Caribbean, some 800 km. apart. The main group, lying off the coast of Venezuela, consists of Aruba, Bonaire and Curaçao which are known as the "Leeward Islands"; to the north lie the small volcanic islands of St. Eustatius, Saba and St. Maarten (the northern half of the latter island being part of the French dependency of Guadeloupe), known as the "Windward Islands" (though actually in the Leeward group of the Lesser Antilles). The climate is tropical, moderated by the sea, with temperatures averaging 27.5°C (81°F), and little rainfall. The official language is Dutch. The dominant language of the "Leeward Islands" is Papiamentu, a mixture of Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, English, Arawak Indian and several West African dialects, and that of the "Windward Islands" is English. Spanish is also spoken. The population of the "Leeward Islands" and Saba is predominantly Roman Catholic whereas that of St. Eustatius and St. Maarten is predominantly Protestant. The state flag (proportions 3 by 2) has a red vertical stripe on a white background, crossed by a horizontal blue stripe charged with six white five-pointed stars arranged in an oval. The capital is Willemstad in Curaçao.

Recent History

The "Leeward Islands" were discovered by the Spanish in 1499 and won by the Dutch in 1634. The "Windward Islands", first found by Columbus in 1493, did not come under Dutch control until 1815. During the Second World War Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands promised independence and in 1954 a Charter gave the islands full autonomy in domestic affairs.

In February 1970 the socialist Government of Ciro Kroon resigned over the nomination of a new Governor and in 1971 the Government of E. Petronia resigned over the defeat in the Staten of new financial measures. Elections were held in August 1973, and Juancho Evertsz became Prime Minister. After the June 1977 elections a coalition Government, excluding the Movimentu Electoral di Pueblo (MEP) of Aruba, was formed, with the leader of the Democratic Party (DP), Silvio Rozendal, as Prime Minister. After an MEP and Frente Obrero boycott of the session, the Staten was eventually convened by a Governor's decree in October. Failure to resolve a strike by civil servants forced Rozendal to resign in April 1979 and elections were held in July. A coalition Government was formed by the Movimentu Antiyas Nobo (MAN), MEP and the Unión Patriótico Bonairiano (UPB), and the leader of MAN, Dominico Martina, became Prime Minister. In December 1980 the Council of Ministers was enlarged by the inclusion of two members of the DP.

Negotiations have taken place with the Dutch Government on the question of independence and in 1979 the Koninkrijks Werkgroep (Kingdom Workshop) was set up in the Netherlands to discuss the form which it should take. In 1980 a 10-year deadline was proposed for independence, with referenda to be held in each of the islands by 1988. Talks on the islands' future continued in 1981, and plans were made to increase representation from the smaller islands in the legislature. In October the Dutch Government recognized in principle the possibility of separate independence for Aruba, with the granting of future aid conditional upon "firm and serious" co-operation between Aruba and the other five islands.

Government

The Governor of the Netherlands Antilles, appointed by the Crown, represents H.M. Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands. He has executive power over external affairs and is assisted by an Advisory Council. Executive power in internal affairs is vested in the Council of Ministers. The Council is responsible to the Staten (legislature) of 22 members elected by universal adult suffrage. The administration of each of the four island groups of Curaçao, Aruba, Bonaire and the "Windward Islands," is in the hands of an Island Council, an Executive Council and a Lieutenant-Governor.

Defence

Although defence is the responsibility of the Netherlands, compulsory military service is laid down in an Antilles Ordinance. The Governor is the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces in the islands and a naval contingent is stationed in the Netherlands Antilles.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is comparatively unimportant, being hampered by poor soils and scarcity of water. The chief products are aloes (Bonaire is a major exporter), sorghum, divi-divi, groundnuts and beans, fresh vegetables and tropical fruit. In June 1980 the Government forbade the import of cucumbers, green peppers, eggplants and hot peppers in an attempt to stimulate domestic production. The chief industry is petroleum refining, which accounted for nearly 20 per cent of the G.D.P., but only 5 per cent of employment, in 1979. Curaçao and Aruba have become increasingly important with the development of the Venezuelan oil industry. The Shell refinery at Curaçao, situated in the natural harbour of the Bullenbaai (capacity 360,000 b.p.d.), and that of Lago Oil in Aruba (capacity 500,000 b.p.d.) are among the largest in the world, although both were operating well below capacity in 1978 and 1979. Oil refining accounts for over 95 per cent of exports by value.

As productive capacity is low, the economy is service-orientated. The tax system is highly attractive to foreign concerns; the offshore sector contributes over N.A.Fl. 70 million per year towards revenue. Efforts have been made to attract non-oil manufacturing industries, and an electronics plant and two chemical plants were set up in the late 1960s. Curaçao has one of the largest dry docks in the western hemisphere, capable of handling ships of 120,000 d.w.t.

The non-oil manufacturing sector suffered from the adverse effects of the world recession following the oil crisis in 1973, and the electronics plant on Curaçao was closed down in 1975. In 1976 there was a record trade deficit of N.A.Fl. 2,054 million. There was some improvement in the late 1970s; the trade deficit dropped to N.A.Fl. 867 million in 1977 and the balance of payments changed from a deficit of N.A.Fl. 20.5 million in 1978 to a surplus of N.A.Fl. 274.9 million in 1979. Tourism is a growth area, especially on Aruba, and helps to alleviate the chronic unemployment which in 1980 stood at an average of around 19 per cent for the islands and at 24 per cent in Curaçao.

In January 1980 the authorities in Bonaire agreed to the proposal made by Amerada Hess Inc. for building an oil refinery on the island. The scheme will provide employment and reduce the need for subsidies from the central Government, but may destroy the tourist attractions from which much of the island's income is currently derived.

The islands receive aid from the Netherlands, budgeted at N.A.Fl. 185 million for 1981, and during her visit in November 1980 Queen Beatrix promised that the islands would continue to receive aid as long as it is required. In July 1980 the Curaçao authorities asked the Dutch Government for a two-year moratorium on their debts, which by 1981 totalled N.A.Fl. 530 million. Since 1964 the islands have been granted funds by the EEC, most of which have been used for infrastructural development, especially in the tourism sector.

Education

Education is not compulsory. The Government spends about a third of the budget on education and there are good facilities. In 1979 there were 215 nursery and primary schools, 68 junior, senior and vocational schools, two teacher-training colleges and one university, sited on Curaçao. There is very little illiteracy.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways. All the islands have a good system of all-weather roads. Each island has a good harbour and an airport. A new container harbour, financed by the Netherlands at a cost of N.A.Fl. 142 million, was begun in January 1981 and should come into operation in 1983. There are international airports on Curaçao, Aruba and St. Maarten, while Bonaire, St. Eustatius and Saba have air strips for inter-island flights.

Tourism

Tourism is a major industry on all the islands and several new hotels have been built on Aruba. The majority of tourists are from the U.S.A., although an increasing proportion of visitors to Curaçao are of Latin American origin. Tourism by cruise ship passengers continues to expand. By 1980 tourism was the largest sector in the economy in terms of employment (outside the public sector), accounting for 10 per cent of total employment, or about 8,000 workers.

THE CONSTITUTION

The form of government for the Netherlands Antilles is embodied in the Charter of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, which came into force on December 29th, 1954. The Netherlands and the Netherlands Antilles each enjoy full autonomy in domestic and internal affairs and are united on a footing of equality for the protection of their common interests and the granting of mutual assistance.

Whenever the Netherlands Council of Ministers is dealing with matters coming under the heading of joint affairs of the realm (in practice mainly foreign affairs and defence) the Council assumes the status of Council of Ministers of the Kingdom. In that event the Minister Plenipotentiary appointed by the Government of the Netherlands Antilles takes part with full voting powers in the deliberations.

A legislative proposal regarding affairs of the realm and applying to the Netherlands Antilles as well as to the metropolitan Netherlands is sent, simultaneously with its submission, to the Netherlands Parliament, the States-General, and to the legislature (Staten) of the Netherlands Antilles. The latter body can report in writing to the States-General on the draft Kingdom Statute and designate one or more special delegates to attend the debates and furnish information in the meetings of the Chambers of the States-General. Before the final vote on a draft the Minister Plenipotentiary has the right to express an opinion on it. If he disapproves of the draft, and if in the Second Chamber a three-fifths majority of the votes cast is not obtained, the discussions on the draft are suspended and further deliberations take place in the Council of Ministers of the Kingdom. When special delegates attend the meetings of the Chambers this right devolves upon the delegates of the parliamentary body designated for this purpose.

Executive power in internal affairs is vested in a nominated Council of Ministers, who are responsible to the legislature (Staten). The Netherlands Antilles Staten consists of 22 members elected by universal adult suffrage. Every island group is an electoral district. Aruba elects eight members, Bonaire one member, the Netherlands "Windward Islands" one member and Curaçao 12 members. In the island groups where more than one member is elected, the election is by proportional representation. Inhabitants have the right to vote if they have Dutch nationality and have reached the age of 18. Voting is not compulsory. Candidates for election to the Staten must be electors who are at least 21 years old. The Staten is elected for four years and has the right of amendment, of inquiry, of interpellation and of initiative. The budget must be approved by the Staten.

The Governor, as representative of the Crown, has executive power in external affairs which he exercises in co-operation with the Council of Ministers. He is assisted by an Advisory Council which consists of at least five members appointed by him.

In its programme, published in August 1977, the new Government agreed inier alia to give each of the six islands a separate constitution, in addition to the national constitution and with any disputes to be submitted to an independent court. Matters reserved for the national Government were to include control of the police, posts and telecommunications, monetary affairs and customs. The islands of Saba and St. Eustatius were each to be given a representative in the Staten who would provisionally have observer status. These provisions were to supersede previous constitutional arrangements.

NEW ZEALAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Dominion of New Zealand lies in the South Pacific Ocean, about 1,750 km. (1,100 miles) south-east of Australia. It consists of North Island and South Island, separated by the narrow Cook Strait, and several smaller islands, including Stewart Island in the south. The climate is temperate and moist, with an average temperature of 12°C (52°F), except in the far north where higher temperatures are reached. The official language is English but the Maori population also uses its own tongue. About 35 per cent of the population are Anglicans, 22 per cent Presbyterian and 16 per cent Roman Catholics, with the remainder belonging to other Christian denominations. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is blue, with a United Kingdom flag as a canton in the upper hoist. In the fly are four five-pointed red stars, edged in white, in the form of the Southern Cross. The capital is Wellington, on North Island.

Recent History

New Zealand is a former British colony. It became a dominion, under the British Crown, in 1907 and achieved full independence by the Statute of Westminster, passed by the British Parliament in 1931 and accepted by New Zealand in 1947.

In 1962 Western Samoa, formerly administered by New Zealand, achieved independence, and in 1965 the Cook Islands attained full internal self-government, but retained many links, including common citizenship, with New Zealand. In October 1974 Niue, one of New Zealand's island territories, obtained similar status "in free association with New Zealand".

In December 1972 the first Labour government for over twelve years came to power, under the leadership of Norman Kirk, after a succession of National Party administrations. When Labour took office, the economy was thriving, mainly as a result of an international price boom for agricultural commodities. However, this prosperity brought with it the problem of inflation. Soaring domestic demand and the energy crisis of 1973-74 led to a rapid rise in imports, a consequent reduction in exchange reserves and a severe balance of payments problem.

The Labour government pursued a more independent foreign policy than its predecessors. It phased out New Zealand's military commitments under the South-East Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) and established diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China.

Norman Kirk died in August 1974 and Wallace Rowling, his Finance Minister, became Prime Minister in September. The economic recession worsened and in November 1975 a general election resulted in victory for the National Party. The new Prime Minister, Robert Muldoon, introduced austere economic policies and a wage freeze. In 1976 the Government reduced the annual intake of migrants from 30,000 to 5,000, and conducted a determined campaign against illegal immigrants.

New Zealand's economy continued to be affected by very low growth and increasing unemployment. Growing dissatisfaction with the Government became clear when its majority in Parliament was reduced in the elections of November 1978 and November 1981. In October 1980 a group of National Party M.P.s suggested that Brian Talboys, then the Deputy Prime Minister, should replace Muldoon as Prime Minister, but the challenge failed when Talboys announced shortly afterwards that he would not be standing for Parliament in the 1981 general elections. Muldoon received much public support for his firm confrontation with trades unions during a major strike in February 1981, but his decision to allow the South African Springboks rugby tour to take place in September caused strong opposition, both at home and abroad.

Government

Executive power is vested in the British monarch, as Head of State, and is exercisable by an appointed representative, the Governor-General, who must be guided by the advice of the Executive Council (Cabinet), led by the Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral House of Representatives, with 92 members (including four Maoris) elected for three years by universal adult suffrage from single-member constituencies. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to the House.

Defence

The total strength of regular forces in July 1981 was 12,913: army 5,675, navy 2,843, air force 4,395. Defence spending for 1980 amounted to $NZ 442.8 million.

Economic Affairs

The external economy is heavily dependent on the pastoral and agricultural industries: wool, meat and dairy products together accounted for 58.6 per cent of export earnings in 1980/81. New Zealand was compelled to cut its exports of butter to the United Kingdom from 115,000 metric tons (70 per cent of export production in 1979) to 95,000 tons in 1980, 94,000 tons in 1981 and 92,000 tons in 1982, on account of the U.K.'s obligations to the EEC. Exports of lamb were also reduced in return for lower EEC import levies. The U.K.'s share of New Zealand exports has declined from 30 per cent in 1971 to under 13 per cent in 1980/81. The growing inaccessibility of its traditional European market has forced New Zealand to expand its markets in other regions, particularly Asia. In 1979/80 the U.S.S.R. replaced the U.K. as the major importer of New Zealand wool, to be supplanted the following year by the People's Republic of China. In 1980/81 the principal customers for New Zealand's exports were Australia (taking 13.9 per cent of exports), the U.S.A. (13.5 per cent), Japan (13.3 per cent) and the U.K. (12.9 per cent).

Manufacturing is expanding and now accounts for about a quarter of G.D.P. and of total exports. The management of exotic forests, providing the basis of the pulp and paper industry, is a rapidly expanding sector and it is expected to raise production from 8.6 million cubic metres (1979) to 36 million in the year 2000. Light industry continues to expand, the principal branches being food-processing and canning, car-assembly, transport equipment, wood and cork products, clothing, footwear and made-up textile goods. A government-sponsored steel industry, based on the smelting of local iron sands, is in operation on the west coast of the North Island. A large aluminium smelter at Bluff produces about 80,000 tons annually. High-quality silica sand has also been found in South Canterbury (South Island).

Since 1974 New Zealand has faced serious economic problems, largely initiated by the effects of a sharp rise in the world price of petroleum on a country almost wholly dependent on imported fuels. Symptoms of the depression include a very low rate of economic growth since 1975 (2 per cent in 1980/81) and a persistent deficit on the current account of the balance of payments ($NZ725 million in 1980/81, equivalent to 3 per cent of G.D.P.). A rise in the number of registered unemployed, from 5,000 in 1975 to 47,000 in 1981, has been accompanied by a shortage of skilled workers, many of whom have been seeking higher pay in Australia. Inflation, at 15.2 per cent in 1980/81, was only slightly lower than the 16 per cent recorded in 1979/80.

The Government has given priority to reviving economic growth, particularly by stimulating the export sector and by rapid development of indigenous energy resources, with new jobs expected as a result. The exploitation of new markets, frequent devaluations of the New Zealand dollar (by about 6 per cent a year in 1980 and 1981) and various export incentive schemes helped to achieve an increase in the volume of exports in 1980/81. However, many economists argue that the removal or reduction of New Zealand's multitude of import controls is necessary to induce greater efficiency in the private sector and more competitive goods for export.

The exploitation of New Zealand's energy resources seeks both to reduce (and eventually to eliminate) the country's dependence on imported fuels, and to increase its energy-related exports, mainly by using natural gas, hydroelectric power and coal to increase the output of energy-intensive products such as aluminium. In 1979 the Government announced that less than 10 per cent of the natural gas resources of the inland Kapuni field, North Island, and the huge Maui field, off the Taranaki coast, would be exported, thus making New Zealand more than 50 per cent self-sufficient in transport fuels by 1987. About 25 per cent of the Maui reserves are to be converted to liquid fuels. New Zealand also has enormous proven coal reserves: South Island has 4,400 million metric tons of lignite. Hydroelectricity contributes three-quarters of the electricity output.

Transport and Communications

New Zealand had 4,478 km. of railways in 1981 and 93,353 km. of roads in 1980. There were about 40 ports, the chief of which are Auckland, Wellington, Lyttelton (the port of Christchurch) and Dunedin. Much traffic between North and South Island is by air; there are also roll-on roll-off ferry services linking Wellington with Picton and Lyttelton. The main centres are joined by an air service network and there are international airports at Auckland, Christchurch and Wellington. In July 1971 the earth satellite station at Warkworth (north of Auckland) was opened and is linked to the INTELSAT III communications system over the Pacific.

Social Welfare

New Zealand has a comprehensive social welfare system administered by the Department of Social Security. A tax is levied on all incomes to finance the services, which provide medical care and benefits for old age, blindness, widowhood, orphanhood, unemployment and sickness, as well as superannuation and family benefits. There are reciprocal agreements with Australia and the U.K. New Zealand had 4,257 physicians (one for every 735 inhabitants) in 1977 and 32,047 hospital beds (one for every 98 inhabitants) in 1978.

Education

State education is free and, between the ages of six and fifteen, compulsory. Primary education lasts from five to eleven, after which children pass on to intermediate schools for two years before going on to secondary schools until a maximum age of eighteen. In 1980 506,602 pupils were enrolled in primary schools and 226,346 in secondary schools. Special educational services cater for children in remote areas and for the handicapped. There are six universities and an agricultural college with university status.

Tourism

New Zealand's main tourist attractions are its high mountains, lakes, hot springs and beaches. There are abundant opportunities for outdoor recreation and New Zealand is particularly well-known for its fishing.

Public Holidays

1982: June 7th (Queen's Official Birthday), October 25th (Labour Day), December 25th (Christmas Day), December 26th (Boxing Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 6th (Waitangi Day, anniversary of 1840 treaty), April 1st-4th (Easter), April 25th (ANZAC Day).

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 New Zealand dollar ($NZ).

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = $NZ 2.31; U.S. $1 = $NZ 1.20.

$NZ100 = £43.29 = U.S. $83.33.

Note: The New Zealand dollar was introduced in July 1967, replacing the New Zealand pound at the rate of £NZ1 = $NZ2. From October 1967 the New Zealand pound had a value of U.S. $2.78, so the initial value of the New Zealand dollar was U.S. $1.39 (U.S. $1 = 71.9 NZ cents). This remained in force until November 1967, after which the exchange rate was $NZ1 = U.S. $1.12 (U.S. $1 = 89.3 NZ cents) until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the par value of the New Zealand dollar was U.S. $1.216 (U.S. $1 = 82.2 NZ cents), though the effective mid-point rate was $NZ1 = U.S. $1.195. From February to July 1973 the exchange rate was $NZ1 = U.S. $1.351 (U.S. $1 = 74.0 NZ cents). In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = $NZ2.143 ($NZ1 = 9s. 4d. or 46.67p.) from November 1967 to December 1971; and £1 = $NZ2.180 from December 1971 to June 1972. The fixed relationship with the U.S. dollar was ended in July 1973, since when the basis for the New Zealand dollar's valuation has been a weighted "basket" of currencies of the country's main trading partners. In September 1973 the New Zealand dollar was revalued by 10 per cent against this "basket" (becoming equivalent to U.S. $1.478) but in September 1974 it was effectively devalued by about 6.2 per cent, and in August 1975 by 15 per cent. In November 1976 the currency was devalued by 7 per cent against the U.S. dollar but this was partially reversed in December. A 5 per cent devaluation was announced in June 1979. The average value of the New Zealand dollar was: U.S. $1.363 in 1973; U.S. $1.401 in 1974; U.S. $1.215 in 1975; 99.6 U.S. cents in 1976; 97.1 U.S. cents in 1977; U.S. $1.038 in 1978; U.S. $1.023 in 1979; 97.3 U.S. cents in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

Head of State

Executive power is vested in the Queen and is exercisable by her personal representative, the Governor-General.

In the execution of the powers and authorities vested in him the Governor-General must be guided by the advice of the Executive Council; but if in any case he sees sufficient cause to dissent from the opinion of the Council, he may act in the exercise of his powers and authorities in opposition to the opinion of the Council, reporting the matter to the monarch without delay, with the reasons for his so acting.

Executive Council

The Executive Council consists of the Governor-General and all the Ministers. Two members, exclusive of the Governor-General or the presiding member, constitute a quorum. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, the other Ministers.

House of Representatives

Parliament comprises the Crown and the House of Representatives.

The number of members constituting the House of Representatives is 92: 88 drawn from general seats and four from Maori seats. They are designated "Members of Parliament". Parliaments sit for three-year terms.

Everyone over the age of 18 years may vote in the election of members for the House of Representatives. Since August 1975 any person, regardless of nationality, ordinarily resident in New Zealand for 12 months or more and resident in an electoral district for three months or more is qualified to be registered as a voter. Compulsory registration of all electors except Maoris was introduced at the end of 1924; it was introduced for Maoris in 1936.

There are 88 European electoral districts and four Maori electoral districts. As from August 1975 any person of the Maori race, which includes any descendant of such a person, who elects to be considered as a Maori for the purposes of the Electoral Act may enrol on the Maori roll for that particular Maori electoral district in which that person resides.

By the Electoral Amendment Act, 1937, which made provision for a secret ballot in Maori elections, Maori electors were granted the same privileges, in the exercise of their vote, as general electors.

In local government, with some minor exceptions, there is a wider electoral franchise, non-residential rate payers also being eligible to vote.

RADIO AND TELEVISION

The Broadcasting Corporation of New Zealand (BCNZ), established in 1977, supervises the independent operating Services, Radio New Zealand (RNZ) and Television New Zealand (TVNZ), and provides transmission facilities for them. Revenue for public broadcasting is derived from radio and television advertising and from the television licence fee. Colour broadcasting began in 1973.

Broadcasting Corporation of New Zealand (BCNZ): Bowen State Bldg., Bowen St., P.O.B. 98, Wellington; f. 1977; nine member board; supervises public radio and television in New Zealand; Chair. IAN R. CROSS.

RADIO

Radio New Zealand: P.O.B. 2092, Wellington; f. 1975; controls 30 community commercial radio stations, 2 non-commercial networks and a short-wave service which rebroadcasts the main National Programme to the north and south-west Pacific islands and South-Eastern Australia. Both non-commercial and commercial networks broadcast 24 hours a day; Chair. Radio Cttee. C. J. FREEMAN; Dir.-Gen. GEOFFREY F. WHITEHEAD.

Commercial radio has been operating in New Zealand since 1937. In 1976 there were seven privately-owned commercial radio stations, depending entirely on commercial revenue but operating under the supervision of the Broadcasting Tribunal.

TELEVISION

Television New Zealand: Centrecourt, Queen St., P.O.B. 3819, Auckland; f. 1980; the television service is responsible for the production of programmes for the two TV networks and for the sale of all local productions. The networks are commercial for 5 days a week and transmit in colour. One network (TV 1) covers the entire population, and the other (TV 2) has some 95 per cent coverage, with extensions planned to match the first. Both networks transmit afternoon and evening, seven days a week, and about 40 per cent of programme content is produced in New Zealand; Dir.-Gen. A. W. MARTIN.

In September 1981 there were 913,559 licensed television sets, including 708,242 colour sets.

NEW ZEALAND'S ASSOCIATED TERRITORIES

New Zealand's associated territories are the self-governing Cook Islands and Niue and the dependent territories of Tokelau and the Ross Dependency.

COOK ISLANDS

The 14 inhabited and one uninhabited islands of the Cook Islands are located midway between Samoa and Tahiti. The total land area of the islands is 234 square kilometres, and they extend over two million square kilometres of ocean. The Cooks form two groups; the Northern Cooks which are all atolls, and include Pukapuka, Rakahanga and Manihiki, and the Southern Cooks, including Aitutaki, Mangaia and Rarotonga, which are all volcanic islands. From December to March the climate is warm and humid, with the possibility of serious storms; from April to November the climate is mild and equable. The average annual rainfall in Rarotonga is 2,134 mm. The capital is Avarua, on Rarotonga.

Recent History

The Cook Islands were proclaimed a British Protectorate in 1888 and a part of New Zealand in 1901. On August 4th, 1965, they became a self-governing territory in free association with New Zealand. The people are British subjects and New Zealand citizens. Sir Albert Henry, leader of the Cook Islands Party, was elected Premier in 1965 and re-elected in 1974 against stiff opposition from the new Democratic Party. The Cook Islands Party was again returned with a majority in the Legislative Assembly in the March 1978 elections, but in July, following an enquiry into alleged electoral malpractice, the Chief Justice disallowed votes cast by Cook Islands expatriates flown from New Zealand in charter aircraft paid for by public funds. The amended ballot gave a majority to the Democratic Party, and its leader, Dr. Tom Davis, was sworn in as Premier by the Chief Justice. In August 1979 Sir Albert Henry was convicted of conspiracy to defraud and was stripped of his knighthood. He died in January 1981.

In May 1981 an Amendment Bill made several changes in the Cook Islands' Constitution, including the creation of a 23rd parliamentary constituency for voters living overseas and the extension of the parliamentary term from four to five years. Many voters were disturbed by the fact that the Constitution allows a Parliament to prolong its own term of office, and a large protest petition was raised.

Economic Affairs

Economic and agricultural development on the Cook Islands has always suffered from isolation and smallness.

All forms of exports, but in particular fresh fruit, oranges, bananas, tomatoes and pineapples, have been hindered by lack of shipping and inadequate marketing in New Zealand metropolitan centres.

The islands receive a large proportion of their revenue in the form of aid from New Zealand and remittances sent back to the islands by migrants. A fruit processing plant and two clothing factories represent the major manufacturing activities.

The outstanding feature of the Cook Islands is the migration of outer islanders into Rarotonga and from there to New Zealand, where, until 1976, Cook Islanders enjoyed free entry as New Zealand citizens. In 1975 more Cook Islanders lived in New Zealand than in the islands but in March 1977 the flow of migrants was reversed for the first time in 30 years.

Following the change of Government in July 1978, the Cook Islands First Development Plan was announced. The main aims are to stimulate the economy, through the private sector wherever possible, by offering incentives and developing infrastructure, negotiating joint ventures with "distant water" fishing nations in order to benefit from the new exclusive economic zone extending to 200 nautical miles (370 km.) from the coasts, and attracting qualified Cook Islanders back from New Zealand. Efforts are being made to attract tourists from New Zealand, and the viability of the islands as a tax haven and a centre for offshore banking was being considered in 1981.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution was proclaimed in 1965, under which the Cook Islands have complete control over their own affairs in free association with New Zealand, but they can at any time move into full independence by a unilateral act if they so wish.

Executive authority is vested in the British monarch, who is Head of State. The Chief Justice of the High Court in the Cook Islands is temporarily representing the Queen after the abolition of the office of New Zealand High Commissioner in 1975. The New Zealand Government is represented by the New Zealand representative, who resides on Rarotonga.

Executive Government is carried out by a Cabinet consisting of a Premier and six Ministers including a Deputy to the Premier. The Cabinet is collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly.

The Legislative Assembly consists of 23 members elected by universal suffrage every five years, one member being elected by voters living overseas, and is presided over by a Speaker. The Upper House or House of Ariki, consisting of up to 15 members who are hereditary chiefs, can advise the Legislative Assembly but has no legislative powers.

Each of the main islands has an Island Council.

THE GOVERNMENT

THE CABINET

(January 1982)

Prime Minister, Minister for Finance, Immigration, External Affairs, Police and Marketing: Dr. Sir THOMAS (TOM) R. A H DAVIS

Deputy Prime Minister, Minister for Health, Telecommunications, Public Service and Northern Group, and Postmaster General: Hon. PUPUKE ROBATI.

Minister for Education, Cultural Development, Library and Museums: Hon. TANGAROA TANGAROA.

Minister for Economic Development, Planning, Attorney General, Minister for Civil Defence, Civil Aviation, Labour and Consumer Affairs and Correctional Services: Hon. VINCENT INGRAM.

Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries, Kia Orana Food Corporation and Legislative Service: Hon. TANGATA SIMIONA.

Minister for Internal Affairs, Justice and Tourism: Hon. IAVETA SHORT.

Minister for Works, Survey, Energy Resources, Building and Housing and Electric Power Supply: Hon. PAPANAMA PAKINO.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Speaker: DAVID HOSKING.

At December 1979 the Democratic Party held 16 seats against the Cook Islands Party's 6 seats. In May 1981 a 23rd seat was created for a member representing Cook Islanders living overseas, but the vacancy was not filled immediately.

HOUSE OF ARIKI

President: PA TEPAERU ARIKI.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Cook Islands Party: Rarotonga; Leader G. A. HENRY.

Democratic Party: P.O.B. 202, Rarotonga; f. 1971; Leader Dr. Sir Thomas DAVIS.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The judiciary comprises the Privy Council, the Court of Appeal and the High Court.

The High Court exercises jurisdiction in respect of civil, criminal and land titles cases throughout the Cook Islands. The Court of Appeal hears appeals against decisions of the High Court. The Privy Council, sitting in the United Kingdom, is the final appellate tribunal for the country.

Chief Justice of the High Court: Sir GAVEN J. DONNE.

Judge of the High Court: J. D. DILLON.

RELIGION

Main groups are Cook Islands Christian Church (Congregational), to which 75 per cent of the population belong, Roman Catholic, Latter-Day Saints and Seventh Day Adventists.

Roman Catholic: Bishop of Rarotonga (Cook Islands and Niue): Most Rev. DENIS G. BROWNE; P.O.B. 147, Rarotonga. There are about 2,200 Catholics in the Cook Islands; publ. The Toiea (six a year).

Radio Ikurangi: Rarotonga; f. 1979; broadcasts on FM.

There were 7,100 radio sets in 1978.

FINANCE

BANKING

The National Bank of New Zealand has a branch on Rarotonga and the government Post Office Savings Bank also operates in the islands.

Cook Islands Development Bank: P.O.B. 113, Rarotonga; f. 1978 to replace National Development Corporation; set up to finance development projects in all areas of the economy and to help islanders establish small businesses and industries by providing loans and management advisory assistance; Gen. Man. J. M. ROWLEY.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

There is a chamber of commerce on Rarotonga and in 1978 the Primary Marketing Board was established.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

On Rarotonga a 33 km. sealed road encircles the island's coastline.

SHIPPING

Ships from New Zealand, the United Kingdom, Japan and the U.S.A. call at Rarotonga. The Shipping Corporation of New Zealand Ltd. operates services between the Cook Islands, Niue, French Polynesia and Auckland, New Zealand. Kyowa Line and Daiwa Lines operate monthly services linking the Cook Islands with Hong Kong, Taiwan, the Republic of Korea, Japan and various Pacific islands.

CIVIL AVIATION

An international airport was opened at Rarotonga in 1974.

Air New Zealand: Rarotonga; passenger and cargo flights between Rarotonga, New Zealand, Fiji, French Polynesia and the U.S.A. (Los Angeles) operated with B737 and DC10 aircraft.

Air Rarotonga: P.O.B. 79, Rarotonga; privately owned; operates internal service between the Cook Islands; Dirs. EWAN F. SMITH, IAN R. RHODES.

Cook Islands Airways: Rarotonga; owned by Air New Zealand and the Cook Islands Government; operates an internal air service between Rarotonga, Mauke, Aitutaki, Mitiaro, and Atiu.

The Cook Islands are also served by Polynesian Airlines (Western Samoa) operating between Rarotonga, American Samoa, Western Samoa and Tahiti (French Polynesia).

NIUE

Niue is a coral island of 259 square kilometres, located about 480 kilometres east of Tonga and 930 kilometres west of the Southern Cook Islands. The principal settlement is Alofi. Since 1974 Niue has been self-governing in the free association with New Zealand. Niueans retain New Zealand citizenship and a sizeable resident Niuean community exists in New Zealand. The 1976 population figures showed a 23 per cent decrease compared with those for 1971; about twice as many Niueans live in New Zealand as on Niue. Emigration is continuing.

New Zealand continues to provide budgetary support and development assistance. New Zealand aid is used in maintaining social services and for economic development projects, mainly in the agricultural sector. Few are engaged in full-time agriculture although most people practise subsistence gardening. The main subsistence crops are taro, yams, cassava (tapioca) and kumara. Copra, honey, passion fruit and limes are produced for export. Pigs, poultry and beef cattle are raised for local consumption.

An Australian mining company spent five years looking for economic bauxite and uranium deposits, and in 1977 drilled the first test bores to determine the quantity and grade of uranium discovered earlier that year. New Zealand aid is providing a deep-sea fishing boat and gear, and training for the crew. A small forestry project is being undertaken, and New Zealand is also to supply portable sawmills and preservative plants to extend the use of coconut wood for fencing, furniture, etc.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Area: 259 sq. km. (100 sq. miles).

Population (Mini-census of March 10th, 1979): Total 3,578 (Males 1,823, Females 1,755).

The crude birth rate for 1979 was 27.3 per 1,000 and the crude death rate 5.9. The infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births was zero.

Agriculture (1976—metric tons): Copra 236, Passion fruit and pulp 273, Limes 133, Honey 31, Beef 12.

New Zealand takes most of Niue's exports (97.6 per cent in 1979) and provides a large part of the island's imports (79.9 per cent in 1979). The main imports in 1978 were food and live animals, manufactured goods, machinery, fuels, lubricants, chemicals and drugs.

THE CONSTITUTION

In October 1974 Niue gained self-government in free association with New Zealand. The latter, however, remains responsible for Niue's defence and external affairs and will continue economic and administrative assistance. Executive government in Niue is through the Premier, assisted by three Ministers. Legislation is carried out by the Niue Assembly but New Zealand, if called upon to do so by the Assembly, will also legislate for the island. There is a New Zealand representative in the territory.

THE GOVERNMENT

New Zealand Representative: T. BAKER.

THE CABINET

Minister of Education, Forestry, Post Office, Telecommunications and Tourism: HON. FRANK FAKAOTIMANAVA LUI.

Minister of Health, Fisheries, Agriculture, Youth, Cultural Affairs and Sport: ROBERT R. REX, JR.

Secretary to the Government: T. M. CHAPMAN.

ASSEMBLY

Speaker: S. P. E. TAGELAGI.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The High Court: exercises civil and criminal jurisdiction in Niue.

The Land Court: is concerned with litigation over land and titles.

Land Appellate Court: hears appeals over decisions of the Land Court.

The Chief Justice of the High Court also presides over the Land Court as Chief Judge and visits Niue quarterly. Appeals against High Court judgments are heard in the Appeal Court of New Zealand.

RELIGION

Seventy-five per cent of the population belong to the Ekalesia Niue, which is closely related to the London Missionary Society, a Protestant organization. The Latter-Day Saints, Roman Catholics, Jehovah's Witnesses, Seventh Day Adventists and Church of God of Jerusalem are also represented.

THE PRESS

ROSS DEPENDENCY

The Ross Dependency comprises the sector of Antarctica between 160° E. and 150° W. longitude and the islands lying between those degrees of longitude and south of latitude 60° S. It has been administered by New Zealand since 1923.

AREA

(Estimate in sq. km.)

Scott Base was established in 1957 on Ross Island. In 1968 a new scientific station was set up at Lake Vanda, about 130 km. west of Scott Base.

Ross Dependency Research Committee: Wellington, New Zealand; responsible to the Minister of Science for co-ordinating all New Zealand activity in the Dependency.

TOKELAU

Tokelau consists of three atolls, Atafu, Nukunonu and Fakaofu, which lie about 480 kilometres north of Western Samoa. The mean average temperature is 20°C.; July is the coolest month and May the warmest; rainfall is heavy but inconsistent.

The islands became a British protectorate in 1877. At the request of the inhabitants Britain annexed the islands in 1916 and included them within the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony. In 1925 the United Kingdom Government transferred administrative control to New Zealand. In 1946 the group was officially designated the Tokelau Islands and in 1948 sovereignty was transferred to New Zealand. From 1962 until the end of 1971 the High Commissioner for New Zealand in Western Samoa was also the Administrator of the Tokelau Islands. In November 1974 the administration of the Tokelau Islands was transferred to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in New Zealand. In 1976 the Tokelau Islands were officially redesignated Tokelau.

Tokelau's soil is thin and infertile. Apart from some copra production, agriculture is of a basic subsistence nature. Food crops include coconuts, pulaka, breadfruit, pawpaw and bananas. Pigs and poultry are raised. Ocean and lagoon fish and shellfish are staple constituents of the islanders' diet.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

There are 123 kilometres of all-weather roads and 106 kilometres of access and plantation roads. At March 31st, 1979, there were 1,009 registered motor vehicles, of which 612 were motor cycles, 264 cars, 59 trucks, 5 buses and 69 other vehicles.

SHIPPING

The best anchorage is an open roadstead at Alofi, the largest of Niue's 13 villages. A shipping service operated by the Shipping Corporation of New Zealand Ltd. (cargo only) is maintained with New Zealand via the Cook Islands on a regular monthly basis.

CIVIL AVIATION

Hanan International Airport has a total sealed runway of 1,650 metres, capable of taking most types of aircraft except modern jet aircraft. The island is served by three weekly commercial passenger and freight services operated by Polynesian Airlines (Western Samoa).

Western Samoan currency is also used.

BUDGET

(SNZ—April 1st to March 31st)

	1980/81
Revenue	246,000
Expenditure	1,906,665
New Zealand Subsidy	1,605,000

Revenue is derived mainly from copra export duty, import duty, and sale of postage stamps, coins and handicrafts. Expenditure is devoted mainly to the provision of social services, particularly health, education, agriculture and communications, and also to public works.

EXTERNAL TRADE

In 1976/77 copra exports totalled $NZ13,001. There were no other exports. The main imports are foodstuffs, building materials and fuel.

THE GOVERNMENT

The administration of Tokelau is the responsibility of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of New Zealand, who is empowered to appoint an Administrator to the territory. In practice, most of the Administrator's powers are delegated to the Official Secretary, Office of Tokelau Affairs

The islands are self-governing in many respects, and are serviced by the Tokelau Public Service. By agreement with the Government of Western Samoa, the Office of Tokelau Affairs is based in Apia.

Administrator: F. H. CORNER.

Official Secretary, Office of Tokelau Affairs: J. P. LARKIN-DALE.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Each village has a Council of Elders or Taupulega which comprises the heads of family groups together with the Faipule and the Pulenuku. The Faipule represents the village in its dealings with the administering power and the public service, and presides over the Council and the court. The Pulenuku is responsible for the administration of village affairs. Both are democratically elected by universal adult suffrage every three years.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The High Court of Niue has civil and criminal jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court of New Zealand has original and appellate jurisdiction. There is provision for a Tokelauan Commissioner on each of the islands to deal with civil proceedings and criminal offences.

RELIGION

On Atafu all inhabitants are members of the Congregational Christian Church of Samoa; on Nukunonu all are Roman Catholic, while both denominations are represented on Fakaofu.

FINANCE

In February 1977 a savings bank was set up on each island; commercial and savings banking facilities are available in Apia, Western Samoa.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

A village co-operative store was established on each island in 1977. Local industries are copra production, wood work and plaited craft goods.

TRANSPORT

The territory is visited about ten times per year by vessels under charter. An irregular seaplane service links Tokelau and Western Samoa.

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Nicaragua lies in the Central American isthmus, bounded by the Pacific Ocean to the west and the Caribbean to the east. Its neighbours are Honduras to the north and Costa Rica to the south. The climate is tropical, with a mean average temperature of 25.5°C (78°F). The rainy season extends from May to October. The national language is Spanish, although English is widely understood. There is no state church but Roman Catholicism is dominant. A new flag is being designed. The capital is Managua.

Recent History

The Spanish reached Nicaragua in 1522 and ruled it as a colony until 1821. The country was part of the Central American Federation until 1838. In 1912, at the Nicaraguan Government's request, U.S. forces established bases in the country. They left in 1925 but returned in 1927, when a guerrilla group, led by Augusto César Sandino, was organized to oppose U.S. intervention. The U.S. forces finally left in 1933, when their role was assumed by a newly-created National Guard, commanded by Gen. Anastasio Somoza García. Sandino was assassinated in 1934, reputedly on Somoza's orders, but some of his followers ("Sandinistas") remained active in opposing the new regime. Somoza became Minister of War, seized power in a coup in 1935 and took office as President in 1936. He was succeeded in 1947 by one of his own nominees but quickly overthrew him and installed an uncle as President. When the latter died in 1950, Gen. Somoza resumed the Presidency and remained in power until his assassination in 1956. The Somoza family continued, however, to dominate Nicaraguan politics until 1979, with one of them ruling either directly as President or as Commander of the National Guard. The family also had extensive business interests and accumulated a considerable fortune.

In 1962 the left-wing Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional (FSLN) the Sandinist National Liberation Front (named after the former guerrilla leader), was formed with the object of overthrowing the Somozas by revolution. After a violent electoral campaign, Gen. Anastasio Somoza Debayle, son of the former dictator, became President in May 1967, holding office until April 1972. He retained his command of the National Guard. A pact formed in 1971 between the opposition Conservatives and the Liberal Party, which supported Gen. Somoza, led to the dissolution of the National Congress, the formation of a triumvirate which ruled until 1974 and the re-election of Gen. Somoza as President in September 1974. The FSLN, operating mainly in rural areas of northern Nicaragua, became increasingly active from 1970.

Martial law was imposed following the earthquake of December 1972, which destroyed much of Managua and killed 10,000 people. It was lifted in June 1974 but re-introduced in December after increased guerrilla activity by the FSLN. In 1977 Amnesty International reported systematic murder and torture by the regime, and in-fluent groups, including businessmen and the Church, spoke out against the Government. Military and political activity increased, despite the ending of martial law. The following year saw the assassination of Pedro Joaquín Chamorro Cardenal, leader of the opposition coalition, the seizure of the National Palace by the FSLN and a national strike. The fighting calmed only when the National Guard recaptured the main towns. A new offensive, begun in May 1979, left the FSLN in control of an area including León and Matagalpa, and by mid-June the Sandinist forces had advanced to hold the slum areas of Managua.

On June 16th the FSLN announced the formation of a provisional government, the five-member (subsequently reduced to three) Junta of National Reconstruction, which was quickly recognized by several countries, while many others broke off diplomatic relations with the Somoza Government and the OAS urged his replacement. With the FSLN in command of many towns and poised for the final onslaught on Managua, Somoza resigned from office and left the country on July 17th. (He was assassinated in Paraguay in September 1980.) On July 20th, after the capital had fallen to the Sandinistas, the Junta and its Provisional Governing Council took power as the Government of National Reconstruction. The constitution was abrogated and Congress dissolved. The National Guard was also dissolved, being replaced by the "Sandinista People's Army". Between 40,000 and 50,000 people were estimated to have died during the Revolution. In August the revolutionary Government issued a Bill of Rights, guaranteeing basic personal freedoms and restoring freedom of the press and broadcasting. Civil rights were restored in January 1980.

The holding of elections, however, was postponed to allow time for the reconstruction of the much-damaged country. The Government began by nationalizing 40 per cent of the country's industry, giving large subsidies to agriculture, embarking on a remarkably successful literacy campaign and mobilizing the population, with the aim of creating a 40,000-strong regular army and a 200,000 strong militia.

In 1981 the political situation began to deteriorate. The opposition protested strongly over the postponement of the elections and the increasing political hegemony of the FSLN. One newspaper, La Prensa, was shut down five times in a matter of months for its criticism of the Government. The Sandinistas became concerned that a counter-revolution might be launched by exiled members of the former National Guard. There was even unrest among the Creole and Indian communities on the Atlantic coast. Steadman Fagoth, leader of the largest Indian group (the Miskitos), attempted to rally his followers to rebellion but was eventually forced to flee the country in April. The Government arrested numerous businessmen, for their reluctance to invest in industry until political freedom was guaranteed, and trade union leaders, for holding extremist views.

The radicalization of the Sandinista regime has had more serious repercussions at international level. The U.S.A.

protested that the Junta was allowing the transshipment of Cuban arms through Nicaraguan territory to help leftist rebels in El Salvador and voiced concern over the excessive size of the Nicaraguan armed forces and militia. Nicaragua, in turn, accused the U.S.A. of harbouring Somocista exiles in training-camps in Florida, from where they were allegedly plotting counter-revolution. In April the U.S.A. suspended all economic aid, including wheat supplies, to Nicaragua and was threatening to impose a naval blockade on Nicaragua if the Cuban arms shipments did not stop. Talks held in October between representatives of the two Governments broke down without achieving a solution, but it was hoped that negotiations would be resumed in early 1982.

Relations with Honduras also deteriorated following several attacks by Somocista rebels from Honduran territory on Nicaraguan frontier posts in the north of the country. A Honduran Air Force aircraft that crashed in December on Nicaraguan territory was allegedly transporting Somocista counter-revolutionaries and the Miskito Indian leader, Steadman Fagoth.

Nicaragua stayed on good terms with a number of Western and Communist countries, receiving arms and wheat shipments from the U.S.S.R. and considerable financial aid from Libya, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela in particular. There was growing international concern, however, that the reactionary U.S. stance could force Nicaragua to turn increasingly to Eastern bloc countries for aid and support.

Government

Executive power is exercised by the three-member Junta, which has appointed a Cabinet of 22 ministers. Legislative power is held by a 47-member State Council, with responsibility for preparing a draft constitution to provide for elections to be held in 1985.

Defence

In July 1981 the professional armed forces were estimated to total 6,700 men. Other sources, however, indicate that the combined armed forces totalled 40,000 in September 1981, with a militia of 70,000. Defence expenditure was budgeted at 370 million córdobas in 1980.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the dominant activity, employing 50 per cent of the work force and accounting for 75 per cent of export earnings. Cotton, coffee and meat are the principal exports. Sugar, timber, bananas, tobacco and shellfish are also important. The sector was severely disrupted by the turmoil but, with the aid of large subsidies, production was restored in 1981 to pre-revolution levels. Workable deposits of gold, silver, lead and zinc were discovered in 1968 in northern Nicaragua, and gold accounted for 8.4 per cent of total export earnings in 1981. A national energy programme, using alternative energy sources (including the 35 MW geothermal plant on the Momotombo volcano, due for completion in 1982), aims to reduce oil imports by 40 per cent. Industry is on a modest scale, including a petroleum refinery, textile mills, tobacco, cement and soluble coffee plants, dairies and a wide range of processing plants.

Although it has nationalized banking, insurance, mining, fishing and forestry, the revolutionary Government is encouraging the existence of private enterprise within a state-regulated economy. The state has expropriated all the land holdings of ex-President Somoza, amounting to 25 per cent of total cultivable land, as well as land that was lying idle. Under a new law, the confiscated land is to be redistributed to some 60,000 heads of families who may work the land themselves or transfer it to their children, but not rent or sell it.

Following two years of positive growth in 1976 and 1977, the civil war paralysed industrial and commercial activity and the G.D.P. fell by 36 per cent in 1979. By 1981, with a trade deficit of U.S. $400 million and inflation at 27 per cent, the Junta was forced to renounce its post-revolutionary expansionist policies in favour of stricter economic measures, aimed at reducing consumption and increasing exports and industrial efficiency. Import duty on non-essential goods was increased from 30 to 100 per cent, strikes were banned, inefficient plants closed down, and new jobs and wage increases restricted to the productive sectors. By the end of the year unemployment levels had dropped and the trade deficit had decreased to an estimated $270 million.

Immediately after the war, there was widespread reluctance to provide Nicaragua with the financial aid needed for it to rebuild its economy. The Carter Administration in the U.S.A. did supply an initial aid package of $117 million, but the response from President Reagan was more guarded. In fact, he suspended aid altogether in April as part of the U.S. sanctions imposed on Nicaragua for assisting Salvadorean guerrillas. In June, however, the World Bank stepped in with a loan of $30 million, followed by a similar amount from the International Development Association. By the end of 1981, foreign aid, since the end of the civil war, totalled $1,211 million. The bulk of the loans is to provide credit to industries with export potential, notably sugar processing, gold and silver refining, and the plastic, wood and chemical industries. Foreign aid will also provide funds for extensive training schemes in all sectors of agriculture and industry so that the Government's long-term plans to modernize the economic infrastructure can be implemented more effectively.

Transport and Communications

In 1980 there were 24,748 km. of roads, including a 384 km. north-south stretch of the Pan American Highway. In 1980 the Siuna-Rdo Blanco road (in the Atlantic zone) was begun, aided by Cuban labour and equipment. State railways (373 km.) join important towns and private lines serve the banana plantations. A new port, costing U.S. $60,000 million, is to be built on the Atlantic coast and ten existing ports are to be improved as part of a programme to increase present handling capacity by 60 per cent. Several rivers are navigable to small craft and steamers serve towns on Lake Nicaragua. AERONICA, the state airline, operates internal and international services. The transport sector received 687.5 million córdobas (11.5 per cent) of the 1980 budget.

Social Welfare

In 1980 Nicaragua had 50 hospitals, with 4,573 beds, and 1,562 physicians. The Government of National Reconstruction plans to establish a unified health service and health and education were to receive the largest allocations in the 1982 budget.

Education

In 1975 an estimated 85 per cent of children aged 6 to 11 years were enrolled at primary schools but only about 24 per cent of those aged 12 to 17 attended secondary schools. Under the 1979 Bill of Rights, primary and secondary education are free and compulsory. In 1977 there were 2,615 primary and secondary schools, many of which were destroyed in the civil war and are now being rebuilt. There are many commercial schools and four universities. A five-month nationwide literacy campaign was launched in April 1980 with the help of 2,000 Cuban teachers. At the end of the campaign it was announced that the adult illiteracy rate had fallen from 52 per cent to 13 per cent.

Tourism

The mountainous region with its occasionally active volcanoes, the Huellas de Acahualinca outside Managua, the mineral baths of Tipitapa, the Las Isletas archipelago and the abundant sea, lake and river fishing are the principal tourist attractions.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 4th (Day of National Dignity), July 19th (Liberation Day), August 10th (Managua local holiday), September 14th (Battle of San Jacinto), September 15th (Independence Day), October 12th (Columbus Day), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 8th (Immaculate Conception), December 24th, 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 10th (Day of National Unity), March 31st, April 1st (Easter).

A considerable number of local holidays are also observed.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is officially used, although some Spanish and local units are also in general use.
